LODGE FORCED TO BACK WATER ON CANAL ISSUE

I believe we should control the Panama Canal in every respect. We should have unhampered charge of its administration. We should be prepared to defend it in case of need. But our attitude toward foreign commerce should be liberal. If we are to live up to the highest standards of this nation, we should administer the canal in the interest of the whole civilized world.

ROBERT P. BASS.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Senator Smith of South Carolina, declared today in the Senate in favor of permitting American ships to have free passage through the canal and was emphatic in his opinion that the whole question was a purely domestic one in which no foreign power had any right to take a hand.

For that reason, Mr. Smith said, the British protest was unwarranted. An interpretation of the treaty in line with those who upheld the British protest would, he said, establish a precedent that might prove more than embarrassing in the future.

Confronted by statements made by Senator Smith in the discussion, Senator Lodge admitted the debate had developed new phases of the question, and he was not now willing to say the United States is now bound to submit the question of tolls to the Senate.

Senator Smith drew a parallel on Senator Lodge to show that the latter, who reported the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, holds a view today that is radically different from that held by him when the arbitration treaties were considered.

Says Lodge Has Shifted.

Quoting from a speech by Lodge in the Senate February 29, last, on the general arbitration treaty with Great Britain, Mr. Smith said:

"'The tolls to be charged by us in the Panama Canal which we have built at our own expense, might be brought before a tribunal in whole or in part composed of foreigners, to be fixed and determined by them. . . . Our title to the canal or to our territory anywhere is not to be dragged before any arbitral tribunal for examination and determination, and nothing should be subscribed to by us which by any twisting could be construed into a promise that we would submit such a question to any judgment but our own.'"

This argument was advanced as a reason why Article III. of the then pending treaty should be amended as advocated by Mr. Lodge.

In 1902, when the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was before the Senate, Mr. Smith pointed out that Mr. Bard of California offered an amendment stating specifically that the United States reserved the right of freedom of passage through the canal to its coastwise trade vessels.

This was defeated and the reason for its rejection was the argument put forth by Senator Lodge and other leaders who, Mr. Smith said, declared it to be absurd to even suggest that the United States did not have the right to give its own vessels free passage and that it would be unwise even to discuss it as that might indicate a possible doubt of the soundness of that position.

Says They Have Shifted.

The contrast between this view and that advanced by the Massachusetts Senator last Wednesday was emphasized by Senator Smith. At that time Senator Lodge said:

"Under our treaties of arbitration nothing could prevent this question from going to the Hague, if we live up to the existing treaties of arbitration we have with thirty-six other powers. It it goes to the Hague I think we may take it as decided now. It is not likely that the United States would ever seek a favorable decision from that tribunal on a question where the interests of Europe are on one and those of the United States on the other."

Mr. Smith went on:

"Although holding that view, Mr. Lodge contended that the United States could pay the tolls, itself, this being a domestic question purely in which no foreign power had the right to interfere. The distinction Mr. Lodge drew at that time was the distinction between freedom of passage without restriction and payment by the government, which constitutes a bounty pure and simple.

"The Senator contended Senator Lodge and others who now hold opinions he believed at variance with those entertained when the original treaty was under consideration, should stand by their original argument upon which they won over the votes for that treaty."

Mitchell Innes, the law officer and charge d'affaires of the British Embassy, conferred today with Counselor Anderson of the state Department on the British protest against free tolls to American ships.

Cardinal Denounces Immodesty in Dress

Vienna Prelate Will Bar All Women in Flimsy Attire from Confirmations.

Special Cable to Boston American.

VIENNA, July 20.—Women dressed in clothing which reveals or only slightly conceals too much of the shoulders and arms, or who wear too tight fitting skirts will be barred from confirmations either as spectators or as godparents to children, according to Patriarch Cardinal Cavallari, who preached a sermon today, which has set all society women of this capital into a flutter of excitement.

Taking as his text St. Peter's Words on feminine apparel, the Cardinal attacked "Immodest, Uncouth Fashions," saying in part:

"The extravagance of woman's dress has reached such a point today that even men, I do not speak of Christians, but ordinary men in the street, feel disgusted. Allow me to tell you what indecent clothing is. I consider that dresses which permit the arms and a great part of the neck to be seen, or in which they are only slightly covered with lace or transparent materials, are indecent; further, skirts which cling to the form may be regarded as indecent, and likely to destroy all feelings of natural modesty.

"How can respectable women appear in public when thus arraged? For my part, I will not permit women so bedecked to attend confirmation, either as spectators or as godparents to children. I possess the right to exclude any and every person who thus shows a want of respect for the Holy Sacrament."

LONDON, July 20.—The Earl of Lonsdale walked into Hyde Park in raiment unusual in London in so far as one detail was concerned. He wore trousers of white duck, a fashion imported from Paris. The noble Earl's costume, for the rest, consisted of the regulation black cutaway and silk hat.

AUTO DEATH INQUEST.

Reported Expected Soon in Case of Miss Hennessey.

BROCKTON, July 20.—The result of the inquest into the killing of Miss Ella F. Hennessey of West Bridgewater, who was run down by an automobile and killed, will probably be made known the first of the week. It was conducted under the direction of District Attorney Baker. David A. Soder, a Tufts College student, employed as a chauffeur in this city, ran the young woman down. He was arrested. The young man has declared that he was not to blame. The testimony of witnesses to the accident was taken.

LENOX ROLLS IN WEALTH.

State Places Assessed Valuation at $10,000,000.

LENOX, July 20.—This town is rapidly crowding Brookline on a valuation for richness. It is the wealthiest town in Berkshire County. The State has placed the assessed valuation at $10,000,000 and the assessors for the town give the amount at $7,834,683. Mrs. Marie Paterson, wife of Robert W. Paterson of New York, is the largest individual tax payer. She gives $4,481 to the town treasury.

POPE A HEAT VICTIM.

Pontiff Ordered by Doctor to Suspend Audiences.

ROME, July 20.—Pope Pius was overcome by heat and fatigue today following the ceremonial for the ninth anniversary of the death of Pope Leo XIII. The Vatican physicians ordered His Holiness to suspend all public audiences until he recovered. Furthermore they advised the Pope to omit as much of his church work as possible during the balance of the Summer and spend his time in leisure.

GOTTELF, FORSAKEN BY WIFE, IN HIDING

New York Man, Whose Wife Eloped With Hired Man, Located in Gloucester.

UNDER AN ASSUMED NAME

GLOUCESTER, July 20.—Henry S. Gottelf of New York City, whose wife eloped to Atlanta, Ga., with Antone Gunterman, her husband's married employe, is living at one of the Summer cottages here under an assumed name.

He has been here three days and is using another name to avoid the notoriety that is now being given his domestic affairs in the New York newspapers.

Dispatches from New York said that divorce papers had been served on Mrs. Gottelf at Atlanta in behalf of Gottelf.

The papers were served by Charles S. Gottelf, the woman's father-in-law.

No mention was made in the New York dispatches of the deserted husband's whereabouts.

It was not known there where he had gone.

His presence here was accidentally discovered. He finally admitted his identity today.

Eloped to Atlanta.

Gottelf, according to the New York story, lived at No. 317 East Seventy-Ninth street with his wife and two daughters. A man in the neighborhood known as "Tony" Gunterman, was given odd jobs by Gottelf. Mrs. Gottelf became infatuated with Gunterman.

When Gottelf went to Cincinnati last April on business, Mrs. Gottelf eloped with Gunterman to Atlanta, where they now are. Gunterman is working there in an iron foundry. Dispatches from Atlanta quote Mrs. Gottelf as saying she is happy, loves "Tony" and will not leave him.

The New York dispatches added that Gunterman's wife, whom he abandoned with two small children, is in destitute circumstances.

The New York dispatches said Mrs. Gottelf had taken $1,000 worth of jewelry which her husband had given her, also that she had signed her father-in-law's name to a check for $196, in Atlanta. Mrs. Gottelf denied this.

The story Gottelf told here today goes farther than the New York one. He said:

"The story of the elopement last April is true, also the one that I have had divorce papers served on my wife. But the story does not go far enough. When my wife left home she took $8,000 of my money and $1,500 worth of jewels, which were her own, besides forging my father's name to checks to the amount of $500. The jewels I had given her at our wedding. Of course she had a right to them. She pursued them and I recovered them before I left New York for Gloucester. I have also made good the checks raised on my father.

Divorce Papers Served.

"I am not going to make any criminal prosecution but it is true that I have had divorce papers served on my wife.

"When I got home from Cincinnati last April and learned that she had cleared out with Gunterman I went to her parents and asked them to assist me. They refused and disowned her. My wife was a poor girl when I married her.

"My two little girls, Beatrice, twelve, and Sophie, ten, are with my parents just now. My wife shall not see them again. I shall send them to school abroad. I never had had any trouble with my wife and don't see why she should have left me. I shall be in Gloucester several days."

Governor Bass Edits the American

Young Executive Much in Earnest

Comments on News Hot Off the Wire

GOVERNOR BASS AT HIS DESK, CONFERRING WITH A MEMBER OF HIS STAFF.

ON account of that Progressive assembly up at Manchester, yesterday, Governor-Editor Robert P. Bass was a little late yesterday in reporting for his work as editor of today's Sunday AMERICAN.

The Governor caught the 4:22 out of Manchester, a steady-going train of splendid history and great popularity which calls at about all the railway stations from Manchester down to Lowell and takes its time about hurrying away.

Due in the North Station at 6:15 o'clock, the train was twenty-two minutes late.

Members of the staff were waiting for the Governor-Editor with a splendid specimen of the White Steamer, and as quickly as the speed limit would allow, the Governor was in the AMERICAN office, had met the men who were to assist him for the evening and was busily engaged in reading proof and glancing over the latest things off the wire.

THAT PROGRESSIVE MEETING.

Naturally enough the Governor-Editor was full of the doings at the progressive meeting he had just left. The meeting lasted four hours. There were some honest differences of opinion among the three hundred followers of Theodore Roosevelt who had come to the metropolis from all parts of New Hampshire.

But without exception every voter was unanimous and the Roosevelt men came out of the hall chums and brothers, as they had gone in.

They did not quit the Republican party. They declared their belief that the Republican party, as such, is without a candidate for the presidency this year. They voted to send four delegates to the Bull Moose convention next month in Chicago. They voted to form a progressive organization—not party—with a State Committee which, wherever it discovers the necessity, shall place a progressive candidate in the field for any office.

Where the Democrats name a progressive against a stand pat Republican, the progressives will support the progressive Democrat. Where both the old parties name stand patters the progressive "organization" will see

Little Boys Starving Despite Doctors' Skill

Two Five-Year-Olds of Town of Webster Swallow Machine Bobbin and Coin.

WEBSTER, July 20.—By coincidence as unusual as it is painful, one five-year-old boy is starving to death here from a bobbin being lodged in his throat and another five-year-old boy is in a critical condition on account of a twenty-five-cent piece being lodged in his stomach.

Last Sunday Timothy Meagher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Meagher of Green street, swallowed a sewing machine bobbin. He was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital, Worcester, where an X-ray examination showed that the small cylinder of steel was lodged in the throat so firmly that it cannot be moved by internal treatment and at such a point that it cannot be reached from the outside without immediate death to the patient. The physicians gave up the case, and the boy was brought back home to starve to death. The little sufferer is very weak and will last but a few days longer, it is feared.

A garden of children stand guard on Green street to keep the neighborhood quiet.

The other five-year-old child who is in danger from putting foreign substance in his mouth is Stephen Fournier, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Fournier of Slater street. Three weeks ago he swallowed a twenty-five-cent piece. The coin is now in his stomach. Doctors have tried vainly to extract the coin with a stomach pump. The child has been kept alive by stimulants.

VIGILANCE COMMITTEE ON TRAIL OF ASSASSINS

The revelations promised in the Rosenthal case, emphasize the trouble which too often results from appointment of heads of police departments by a local official. The danger lies in the temptation which always will exist to use the police for political purposes. Politics in the Police Department is the chief obstacle to efficiency. It is only too apt to breed graft.

I should say it is time that the people of New York placed the appointment of a police commissioner in the hands of the Governor.

I say this too, believing in the principle of home rule for cities. Such an appointment in the case of a big city like New York, would be no violation of this principle. The voters of New York city could punish a bad Governor as quickly as they could apply the birch to a bad mayor.

Any method of appointing such a commission which will, on the one hand remove it from politics, and at the same time keep it responsible to the public which it serves, will in the long run give the best results.

Disgusted by Failure of Police to Run Down Slayers of Rosenthal, Citizens' Union Joins Hunt; More Arrests Expected

NEW YORK, July 20.—Disgusted by the inactivity of the police officials and by their failure to clear up the mystery of the murder of Herman Rosenthal in front of the Hotel Metropole, just as he was about to complete the charges he had made of police collusion with gamblers, what is virtually a vigilance committee today took charge of the investigation, with District Attorney Whitman and the Burns Detective Agency doing the work.

Leading members of the Citizens' Union form part of the vigilance committee, and will pay the expenses of the Burns detectives.

District Attorney Whitman, representatives of the citizens movement, and William J. Burns are in conference at Long Beach, directing the efforts of many detectives.

Angry At Public Delay.

The coming of the citizens into the investigation followed the failure of the police to arrest any of the leading figures some of whose have been known since the night of the killing. Aroused by this action on the part of the citizens, George S. Dougherty, Second Deputy Police Commissioner, this afternoon announced the mystery will be cleared up soon, and that the solution will exonerate the police.

It became known today that at least some of the men involved in the Rosenthal murder—and probably those who did the actual killing—have fled.

District Attorney Whitman will present the following facts to the Grand Jury as a synopsis of the evidence in hand:

Herman Rosenthal was murdered by a gang of East Side thugs on the night before he was to have substantiated charges of grafting against Police Lieutenant Becker.

These thugs were secured for that purpose by Jack Rose, the gambler, who had intimate relations with Becker, and who had been put under pressure by Becker to see that Rosenthal's mouth was closed.

Rose was a leading spirit in 'getting' Rosenthal, but he had arranged his plans so he would not be present at the actual crime.

A remarkable coincidence, said to have been uncovered by the District Attorney's investigators, is that Lieutenant Becker and Jack Rose were in close proximity to each other, as well as to the scene of the murder, shortly before it was committed.

Dougherty Knows 'em.

Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty says he knows all the men who have been mentioned so far as those who may have figured in the plot against Rosenthal. Here are some of those named besides the prisoners in the tombs and the now all-important figure, Big Jack Zelig, "Schamps" or "Shapps," and a gambler known as "Tinky," who got into the car with Rose when it met him in front of Sharkey's place; Whitey Lewis, Lefty Louey "Gib, the Blood," whose right name is said to be Horowitz. Report has it that some of these have left town. All have been affiliated in one way or another with the Sam Paul Association.

A peculiar condition of affairs in the courts of this city became apparent today when it was learned that more than $70,000 worth of confiscated gambling apparatus had been returned to gamblers during the past year. All this property, consisting of roulette wheels, faro layouts, gaming tables, chip racks and cards had been seized in thirty-one raids by the police. Immediately on the release of the accused owners of all this paraphernalia, they secured writs which enabled them to recover their property. Rosenthal was among the gamblers, who, advised, saved his machinery in this fashion.

It is recalled that, in 1908, General T. A. Bingham, then Police Commissioner, said:

"There are two places within half a mile of where we are now where murderers can be hired, where any crime, from the lowest to the greatest, can be bought for money. I know it, and the police, no doubt. I can't touch them under present conditions, but I say this to all New York, and will prove it if I can the opportunity. Thats one reason why I want some secret service money.

BOSTON MAN SAYS HE SAW ROSENTHAL SHOT

Jacob Wiseman, a young man of Boston, had a thrilling time up his visit in New York last week. He was a witness of the dramatic shooting on Broadway that left Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, dead in his tracks on the sidewalk.

Young Wiseman was a few feet away when the shots were fired and dashed to the side of the dead man. He stood within a few feet of the big gray automobile which contained the murderers as it started on its flight.

The graphic story as Wiseman dictated it to a stenographer, follows:

By JACK WISEMAN.

My name is Jack Wiseman. I live at No. 21 Masconia street, Dorchester. I have been working at my present place of business for over five years. I am twenty-two years old.

I left Boston for New York at 3 o'clock last Saturday afternoon for a week's vacation. I have an uncle in New York and it was my intention to spend most of my time with him.

I was accompanied by a friend—a young man about my own age. He is also a Bostonian and lives in Roxbury.

We reached New York last Sunday morning. We took a car and went to Thirty-eighth street to the Plymouth Hotel and got a room there.

On Monday we sauntered about New York and took in the sights. On Monday evening we came across a crowd of young men from Boston with whom we were acquainted. Most of them were actors and we had met them in Boston. We decided that we would spend Monday evening at the Blaito.

Near When He Heard Shot.

We spent all Monday evening walking about in what is known as the theatrical and gradeside section of the city, and when it got to be about half-past one on Tuesday morning we found ourselves on George Cohan's theatre on Broadway, near Forty-second street.

At this time there were in the crowd, beside myself, my friend who accompanied me from Boston, one Julius Burman, who formerly lived in Boston, but is now living in New York. We sat down on the steps of the New York Times Building at Forty-second street and Broadway.

The Metropole Hotel is diagonally across from Broadway and there we were sitting. The first that I noticed of any trouble was when a shot rang out. There were not very many people in the street at this time.

"A tire has burst," I yelled out, thinking it was an automobile accident, as the shot sounded very much like the bursting of a tire.

No sooner had I said that then four more shots rangs out in quick succession. We three then realized that it was not a tire bursting, but that somebody was firing off a revolver.

"Somebody has been killed," I cried, and all three of us dashed across the street. In the excitement we separated.

Saw Big Gray Auto.

When I ran across the street the first thing that caught my eye was a big gray automobile. It was just starting away. In the automobile at the time there were at least six men. The chauffeur was in the act of starting the machine and another man in the car, who seemed anxious to get away, was apparently urging the chauffeur to hurry up. It may be that the second man knew how to run a car himself and was trying to assist the chauffeur.

A crowd was collecting—men and women rushing in from all sides—as this is one of the most conspicuous spots in America, and it is very easy for a crowd to collect even at any hour of the night, at Broadway and Forty-second street.

Uniformed policemen with big bullies in their hands, raced up to the scene. They were closely followed by the crowd back.

As I was so near when the shooting took place, I reached the spot of the tragedy as quick, almost, as anybody else. I saw lying on the sidewalk the man, who was apparently dead. Afterwards I learned that he was Rosenthal, the gambler. The man had crumbled down on the sidewalk after being shot, with one leg crossed over the other, and a cigar that still had a gold band around it was clasped in his left hand as he lay on his back with his blood-strained face staring up into the sky.

Water in Dead Man's Face.

Somebody ran out of the hotel and dashed three or four glasses of water into the man's face. Finally the automobile, with its half-dozen occupants, got started and went east toward Sixth avenue.

Six or eight policemen jumped into an automobile that was standing on the street and started in pursuit of the murderers' automobile.

Other policemen appeared and climbed into a second automobile. Then a man who was apparently a detective or a police officer of some kind in citizen's clothes rushed up with a revolver in his hand.

"Back up there and get started!" this man said.

The second police auto followed the first, going east along Forty-second street.

In the meantime the crowd was growing to enormous proportions and the policemen prevented anyone from approaching the body. Someone from the hotel brought out a sheet and covered the body.

This was after the ambulance had arrived. But when the doctor saw the man was dead there was nothing for him to do.

Body in Street an Hour.

The body lay in the street for fully an hour.

I would not be sure whether I could identify any of the people in the automobile or not. I would probably the first man on the scene, and when I got there I walked right close to the body and looked at the man. There was no one to prevent me.

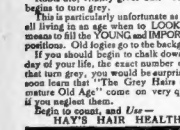
I was within four feet of the side of the automobile from the men who had done the shooting. I don't know whether more than one man did the shooting or not, because I did not see any revolvers in the hands of the people in the machine. They got started just as I reached the curb where the man lay dead.

GET NAMES OF MEN IN ROSENTHAL KILLING

NEW YORK, July 20.—A complete confession has been made by one of the men suspected of assassinating Herman Rosenthal, the wealthy gambler.

Attaches of the District Attorney's office predicted today that within twenty-four hours the men who rode in the murder automobile and the man who did the actual killing would be arrested. This prediction was confirmed by Assemblyman Aaron J. Levy, attorney for Shapiro and Libby, owners of the machine in which the assassins escaped.

He said: "The District Attorney has



"THE HAIRS OF YOUR HEAD ARE NUMBERED"

There is a great deal of truth in the old saying.

Roots die, vitality gives out. The hair begins to turn grey.

This is particularly unfortunate as we are all living in an age when to LOOK young means to fill the YOUNG and IMPORTANT positions. Old fogies go to the background.

If you should begin to chalk down every day of your life, the exact number of hairs that turn grey, you would be surprised and soon learn that "The Grey Hairs of Premature Old Age" come on very quickly, if you neglect them.

The revelations promised in consequence of the Rosenthal case, emphasize the trouble which too often results from ~~false~~ appointments of heads of local police departments by a local official. The danger lies in the temptation which always will exist to use the police for political purposes. Politics in the police department is the chief obstacle to efficiency. It is only too apt to breed graft.

Governor Bass does not use a typewriter, but sets down his ideas rapidly in a clear, legible hand, with a lead pencil on ordinary copy paper as if thoroughly accustomed to the rough-and-ready methods of a newspaper shop.

GOV. BASS HAS A BUSY EVENING AS EDITOR

to it that the progressives of both parties have a candidate they all can cheerfully vote for.

The Governor said in explanation:

The great thing our folks did up there today was to repudiate the action of last month's convention. This was a step in advance in the eyes of any honest man, whatever party he happens to belong to, for the reason that it brands dishonesty and fraud as something we Americans will not stand for.

"FOUR GREAT LEGISLATIVE ISSUES."

New Hampshire will want Progressives in the next Legislature, as she has hardly needed them before.

There will be four great legislative issues.

There is the settlement of the railroad rate question.

There will be the Grand Trunk Railway proposition.

There will be the remodelling of New Hampshire's taxation system, following the adoption of a Constitutional amendment recently submitted to the people. This particular issue we look upon as vital.

And then there will be the election of a United States Senator, a matter which will interest Wall Street itself.

Wherefore I say that it is most important that we have at Concord next January some influence to guard and protect the interests of the people of the State in the Legislature.

The fearless and independent body of men which was today gathered in Manchester, together with the organization there outlined, will be particularly well situated to carry out this purpose.

In appearance the young Governor of New Hampshire proved to be quite like the pen picture of him which appeared in the AMERICAN of yesterday. He is remarkably boyish-looking. He would strike the stranger as fully a dozen years younger than he is found to be in Who's Who.

Can Be Man of Iron.

And he is quiet and easy-spoken, as he was said to be, but, when occasion demands, a young man of iron. When there was something in the news of the night that he didn't care for—the more trifling and more unimportant things that find their way into every newspaper shop—the Governor-editor allowed that he didn't care for it. He usually said this in a quiet but firm tone which said "no," and you knew he meant "no."

There is no misunderstanding the Governor of New Hampshire.

Governor Bass was plainly interested in the news about the Mikado and his condition. He talked about the great advance the Japanese have made since the day of Commodore Perry.

"The Mikado of Japan," the Governor said, "is the man who above all others in public life has seen the greatest changes in his country and has led his people to a more advanced position and civilization. From what we can learn of the growth and development of Japan under the reign of the Mikado there is every reason to believe that as one of the results of his wise leadership, this progress will be continued unchecked."

About Rosenthal Case.

Things began to come from the wire about the Rosenthal murder in New York, and the progress of the District Attorney's office in placing responsibility for the gambler's murder.

Governor Bass thinks that local politics is apt to play too important a part in the police administration of large cities. He thinks the Police Commission should be named by the Governor, especially where, as in New York, the hands of the Governor are not tied or hampered by the "consent of the Council."

"The great trouble with the appointment of Police Commissioners by a local official, who holds his office merely at the hands of the electorate of the community, is that one of the chief sources of danger to an honest and efficient administration of the police department lies in the fact that it may be used by politicians for political purposes.

"It seems to me that any method of appointing such a commission which will on the one hand remove it from politics, and at the same time keep it responsible to the public which it serves, will in the long run give the best results."

And Talks Baseball.

When a young man from the sporting department came in with "baseball" to the Governor-Editor, Mr. Bass threw up his hands and lifted the story of the Hardy Abies and the Barely Ables. You who like baseball will be interested in the war of the Abies. You will find it on the baseball page.

Governor Bass found the AMERICAN office an interesting place. Everybody liked him.

Only one thing is worrying the men of the Sunday AMERICAN staff. Last week Governor Plaisted of Maine won every man on the paper. Last night Governor Bass liked them up.

Banish Christians to Barren Island

Koreans Among the 120 Accused of Conspiracy Against Japanese Governor-General.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Seven native Christians in Korea have been banished to a barren island South of Corea, according to information received here by friends of American missionaries in that country. Also 120 Christians have been placed on trial for an alleged plot against the Japanese Governor-General.

The best known of the banished seven is An Pyong Chan, one of the most brilliant of the native lawyers. He had been retained to defend five of the prisoners. It looked as though his work in their behalf might free them.

"Banish pills!" was the decree.

That ended his services as a lawyer. Those on trial may lose their lives.

DYER ASKS RELEASE FROM CINCINNATI

CINCINNATI, July 20.—Dr. P. S. Dyer, superintendent of schools, applied to the Board of Education today to be released from his Cincinnati contract, which has five years to run, in order that he may accept the offer of superintendent of the Boston public school at $10,000 a year. "The Boston proposition," said Dr. Dyer, "is the leading educational office in the United States. To an educator it is the same as elevation to the Supreme Bench is to a lawyer."

Members of the Business Men's Club, Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Association are talking of raising a fund to be added to Dr. Dyer's Cincinnati salary, so as to make his remaining less financially equal to his Boston prospect. Here Cincinnati salary is $7,500.

But Dr. Dyer put a question on this plea today when he said:

"I would refuse to accept money raised by popular subscription to hold me in Cincinnati. And I shall not go to Boston unless the Cincinnati Board of Education voluntarily releases me."

This puts the situation squarely up to the Board of Education. Dr. Dyer will leave Cincinnati with regret if he does go.

"I have been here for years," he says "and the schools of this city are the apple of my eye."

ROSE PITONOF SHOWS PROWESS TO BRITONS

Boston Swimmer Practices in Hornsey Pool, but Her Costume Gets Censored.

Special Cable to the American.

LONDON, July 20.—Rose Pitonof, the Boston girl who plans to swim the English channel, today took her first practice since her arrival in England. Restrictions in the matter of the kind of bathing suits she had to wear amused the young American girl greatly.

"Accompanied by my father and a chaperone," she said, as she emerged from the pool this afternoon, "I visited the covered swimming pool in Hornsey. There I had my first setback, when, having hurriedly changed into my bathing costume, I rushed to the water, but just as I was shaping for a dive, one of the lady attendants stopped me and said I could not go into the water in the costume I was wearing—the one I wear when swimming long distances—because it was not of regulation design, and today was mixed bathing day.

"She added that I would have to change it if I went into the pool, so I donned a costume supplied by an attendant.

"It was good to be in the water again. I could have stayed there forever, though it did seem a little warm. Yes, I guess I feel more sure than ever that I shall swim the channel, but I shall not really begin serious practice until I go to Dover Thursday. Sea conditions are so much different from still water that I hope to have several practice swims before leaving London."

During the thirty-five minutes Miss Pitonof stayed in the water, she gave a delightful exhibition of speed and fancy swimming, first going many times at top speed down the pool, which is sixty feet in length. In the sprinting she demonstrated her beautifully clear and speedy breast stroke. This is her favorite, and the one she always uses for fast as well as long distance swims.

She then performed tricks in the water, one which she calls the Indian float, wherein she folded her arms and legs until she resembled a ball, yet kept afloat without a movement of her limbs. She followed this with slide dives, back dives, somersaults, Catherine and Porpoise stroke wheels, all her movements being executed with the grace and confidence found only in the born expert swimmer.

Miss Pitonof's father will go to Dover tomorrow to arrange for her practice work there.

SALEM LAWYERS AT ODDS.

"Should Court Hold in Hot Weather?" the Question.

Salem lawyers are at odds over the question: "Should court hold in hot weather?"

Reports from the Witch City yesterday were that some maintain court sessions should cease in such withering hot waves as this section has recently undergone.

Other attorneys and some litigants say court should sit right through. Prisoners in jail, who hope to be acquitted, are said to be unanimous in the uninterrupted court, whether or not.

The argument is made that most everyone else has to work right along, like doctors, merchants, clerks, mechanics, reporters, and about all others except malefactors of great wealth and lunatics.

GIRL NEAR DEATH FROM CHLOROFORM

Taunton Police Hint at Love Motive in What They Call Suicide Attempt.

TAUNTON, July 20.—Catherine Dundas of Clinton, an unusually pretty girl of seventeen, who has been visiting here two weeks, is hovering between life and death in the Taunton Hospital from drinking chloroform in what the police say may be a case of unrequited love.

Miss Dundas was found in her room with a bottle of chloroform in her hand on Thursday, and said, it is asserted, she was going to kill herself. The poison was taken from her. Today Miss Dundas procured another bottle and drank the contents. Her father, Thomas Dundas, of No. 50 Greeley street, Clinton, was notified, and now is by his daughter's side.

Mrs. E. C. Strange, the girl's landlady, heard moaning, and found Miss Dundas unconscious in her room, with the empty chloroform bottle near. At the hospital the girl was revived. So far she has made no statement. The physicians do not say yet they can save her.

The children were playing about the kitchen at their home, No. 374 Cohannet street. The older of the two boys grasped the handle of the wash boiler and pulled it down onto himself and the younger child. The children were rushed to the hospital in the automobile ambulance.

Japanese Nation Grieves for Its Dying Ruler

The Mikado is the man who, above all others in public life today, has seen the greatest changes in his country and has led his people to a more advanced position and civilization.

Judging from the growth and development of Japan under the Mikado's reign, there is every reason to believe that, as one of the results of his wise leadership, this progress will be continued unchecked.

Robert P. Bass.

Members of Cabinet Summoned to Bedside

DYING RULER OF JAPAN; CROWN PRINCE, ALSO ILL, AND ENTRANCE TO PALACE

Illness of Mikado and New York Police Scandal Interest the New Hampshire Leader

TOKIO, July 20.—Mutsuhito, the Emperor of Japan, is dying. His death is hourly expected. Members of the Japanese Cabinet and of the Imperial family have been summoned to the palace. The court physicians, who were summoned to the bedside of the dying Emperor, diagnosed his illness as acute nephritis.

The court physicians have been in constant attendance since nine o'clock this morning. They gave out an official bulletin on the Emperor's condition late this afternoon stating that his temperature and pulse were very high, and respiration low.

The Emperor has been unconscious since Thursday. His brain was affected on that day, according to the doctors' report. They reported that he has been ill since 1904, suffering from diabetes. This, say they, developed a chronic kidney trouble. He has been suffering from an intestinal affection also.

Crown Prince Ill.

Since he was stricken on Thursday night the Empress and the Imperial Princes have been at the bedside of the dying ruler. Prince Yoshihito, the heir to the throne, is ill with chicken-pox and is confined to his bed. He has been unable to go to his father's bedside. The Princess Yoshihito, wife of the heir-apparent, is in constant attendance and is keeping her husband acquainted with his father's condition by telephone. She is sending him hourly bulletins.

Thousands are gathered about the bulletin boards at the newspaper offices. The crowds are increasing, even though the thermometer registers above 90 in the shade.

The city of Tokio is silent. All theatrical performances have been stopped. No music is being played. All the Buddhist temples are holding special religious services. All the Japanese people are praying for the recovery of the Emperor.

Japanese newspapers throughout the country are hoeing editorials in which they extol the greatness of their Emperor and pray for his speedy recovery. The local stock exchanges felt the illness of the Emperor. Prices in stocks slumped rapidly.

Notify Ex-Premier.

When the serious condition of the Emperor was learned an official notification in the form of a telegram was rushed to Prince Katsura, the former premier, who is now on a mission to Europe. His hurried return is expected.

The first news of the Emperor's condition was sent to the Ninth-Night shortly after noon. This was followed by the official bulletin sent out by the court physicians at 2 o'clock. The bulletin is as follows:

"The Emperor has been suffering from diabetes since 1904. This developed into chronic kidney trouble in 1906. Since July 14 His Majesty has been suffering from intestinal trouble. Great drowsiness followed the early attacks, this symptom increasing rapidly. On July 18 His Majesty became unconscious, and his brain was affected. On the evening of the 19th the fever suddenly increased, showing a temperature of 104.7. The pulse rate was 104 and the respiration 28."

GILBERT-SULLIVAN OPERA INSPIRED BY THE RULER OF JAPAN

The Mikado of Japan was "discovered," as it were, by Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan, the light opera collaborators. They made the Japanese ruler known to the Western world in a way that he never was before.

While the Mikado of Japan was reputed among diplomats many years ago as an enlightened ruler and one far ahead of his immediate predecessors, it was not until 1885 or so, when the Gilbert and Sullivan opera "The Mikado" was produced, that the Mikado became a household word.

Mutsuhito was born in 1852 at Kioto. When he was sixteen years old he was enthroned by a revolution which restored his line to power after the Tycoons had usurped control for 260 years.

Mutsuhito transferred the seat of power to Tokio and inaugurated a reign which is boasted by Japan as "Enlightened peace or civilization."

He was ably seconded by his consort, the Empress Haruko, whom he married in 1869.

The Crown Prince.

The present Crown Prince, Yoshi-Hito, was born in 1879. He is not the Empress' son. The Empress is childless. In order that the succession should not fail, Mutsu Hito took morganatic or deputy wives. Yoshi-Hito, the son of a deputy wife, was made Crown Prince at the age of ten.

Mutsu Hito showed himself of imperial courage and ability. The Shoguns, or powerful nobles, had absorbed the real power. The Mikado had become a nonentity as sovereign. Mutsu Hito showed himself a real as well as theoretical ruler. He surrounded himself with able advisers. He kept the Shoguns subdued. He worked steadily for the advance of the people.

Adopts Western Ideas.

In the royal palace at Tokio the Emperor gradually installed many Western improvements. He slepts on a bed and not on a door mat. He wears clothes more of the English pattern, though he is girded with the ceremonial sword of the Samurai on State occasions.

The rigid routine of official life has chafed the Mikado much. He submitted to his day being divided into periods for this and that, to the formalities of dress and to the elaborate ceremonials of court. But he has avoided extreme ceremony where possible.

To the Japanese people the Mikado is peculiarly hallowed. He is "heaven-descended, divine and sacred. He is prominent above all his subjects. The law has no power to hold him accountable to it."

Western diplomats and statesmen, who have been brought in contact with the Mikado and his Cabinet, may not admit his divine descent, but they have allowed more and more, as years went on and Japan advanced, that Japan's political policies are something to be closely watched.

The victories of Japan over China and then over Russia opened the eyes of the world wider than ever.

Now there are statesmen who say there is no fault to Japan's future.

This is the nation whose Mikado was discovered and made by a couple of light opera geniuses twenty-five years ago.

Warship Wyoming Does 22.045 Knots

New Battleship Breaks Records on Standardization Trials Off Maine Coast.

ROCKLAND, Me., July 20.—The new battleship Wyoming, proclaimed queen of the seas as the result of her record-breaking performance in turning up 22.045 knots on her standardization trial, left here today for a series of trial runs down the coast. She will complete these probably about Tuesday and put in at Philadelphia. Her first trial on the coast run will be to maintain a speed of 20.5 knots for four hours.

The Wyoming's speed of 22.045 knots is declared by naval experts who were aboard to be the fastest time ever made by any battleship in the world carrying twelve-inch guns. The Arkansas, during her trials a month ago, placed the record at 21.493 knots.

DAKOTA DAN ASKS FRIENDS TO AID HIM

Says He's Left Almost Without Funds by Long Fight for "Birthright."

MANY NEW WITNESSES

The unique legal battle of Dakota Dan, to establish that he has a right to the name and inheritance of Daniel Blake Russell, the son of the late Daniel Russell of Melrose, will be continued at 10 o'clock tomorrow before Master Percy to the East Cambridge Court. Fresno Dan declared by Dakota Dan a usurper, will take the stand for a continuation of the grilling which he received from William R. Scharren, Dakota Dan's lawyer, last week.

Dakota Dan passed yesterday in Scharton's office in the Carney Building on Tremont street. He received many friends, who offered to appear in his behalf. Others have written to him. Many of them, learning Dakota Dan had spent all the money he had made in the West in his efforts, so what they offered in his birthright, have offered to defray their expenses in coming to his assistance.

Would Accept Help.

One of the new witnesses will be Mrs Addie Coombs of Waltham. She is an enthusiastic adherent of the Dakota claimant, while her brother, at the last court hearing, testified against him. Two women relatives whose testimony is of vital interest to Dakota Dan will come forward in his behalf at this hearing. He is not disclosing their names at this time.

Dakota Dan issued this statement to the public yesterday:

Many of my friends and sympathizers from time to time assured me that they stood ready to render me every possible assistance in prosecuting my fight for my share of my father's estate. Though I have felt ever grateful to them for their kind proffers of aid I have been able up to this time to press my claims without outside help.

But my long battle for recognition has about drained my resources. Exponent of one kind and another—particularly lawyers' fees—have reduced the sums of money I brought with me from the West, so that I am now left almost without funds with which to continue the fight.

Appeal to Friends.

To those friends who have so kindly proffered assistance I now appeal. Without their aid I shall be forced to give up my long battle. I shall accept any contributions which my friends or sympathizers may wish to send me with grateful thanks.

DANIEL BLAKE (Dakota Dan) RUSSELL.

No. 6 Bulfinch street, Room 7, Boston, Mass.

George W. Cartwright, of Fresno, Cal., who brought Fresno Dan to Boston, admits that he made a contract with Fresno Dan, as Fresno Dan stated on the witness stand, by which he was to receive a certain share of any money that Fresno Dan received.

Dakota Dan's Own Life Story Will Be Found on Page 11 of This Section.

TELLS ENGINEER'S PERIL.

Electric Wire Constant Danger, Says Witness at Hearing.

NEW YORK, July 20.—That there is great danger to the man who runs an electric locomotive, was the testimony given today before the Engineering Arbitration Commission by J. F. Garland an electric engine operator on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. Mr. Garland said that the overhead wire with its charge of 11,000 volts is a source of great danger. He said the man in the cab is warned not to get within fourteen inches of this overhead trolley. He preferred to run a steam locomotive as the wages are the same and the danger less.

Battle of Suffragettes in Mattapoisett

"Pros" and "Antis" Bill Rival Meetings

Back Bay and Brookline Society Leaders at War in Summer Colony Over Suffrage.

To vote or not to vote, that is the issue,
Whether 'tis a nobler thing for womankind
To seek the ballot in unnatural multitude,
Or to take arms against the suffragists,
And by opposing end them?

Mattapoisett Meeting.

MATTAPOISETT, July 20.—Women in the Mattapoisett summer colony are ready to rwain, at bloodless daggers' points, and the bone of contention is well worth the think: VOTES FOR WOMEN.

It's a fact. It's war in the home among the leaders of the society set, most of them prominent in the Back Bay and Brookline. They're dead earnest in this fight, too. And so it comes about that within the next two weeks the old Mattapoisett Town Hall will be ringing with speeches, both for and against Votes for Women. While the battle is raging, the old town is in its ears with interest, having dropped politics and other town squabbles like hot cakes in order to be spectators of the most engaging warfare within the memory of Mattapoisett's oldest inhabitant.

There are two grimly determined factions in the Summer society colony.

First come the Suffragists.

Then there are the Antis.

Heading the "Pros" is Mrs. Thomas Pelham Curtis of Beacon street, Boston, a general who knows how to marshal her forces.

Leading the "Cons" is Mrs. Hamlin, wife of the Hon. Charles S. Hamlin, himself a politico leader of note.

Mrs. Curtis' Assistant.

Each general has her staff. Mrs. Curtis is being ably assisted by the well-known Miss Alice Carpenter, and other Boston suffrage leaders. The Suffragists have found a distinguished helper in the person and silver-tongued oratory of Hon. Roger Sherman Hoar.

On the other side are arrayed with Mrs. Hamlin, Mrs. Lindsley Loring of Boston; Mrs. J. Lewis Slackside of Boston; Mrs. Augustine H. Parker of Boston, Mrs. James Codman of Brookline, Miss Mary Bernard of Boston and Mrs. Herbert Winter of Boston.

Already the tocsin has sounded, and the warfare has begun. The whole town has been circularized by both sides, showing that the women are up on all the strategic points of how to wage suffrage strife. The women are also good debaters on both sides. Moreover, there is the point just scored by Mrs. Curtis of the suffragists in their listening her teeth and giving it this neat name: Votes for Women. The yacht is proving a wondrous advertisement of the cause as it sails around Marion, Mattapoisett, Fairhaven and New Bedford.

Circulars Flood the Town.

Today new circulars were put out by both sides, and the all the year-round townspeople are sitting up and taking notice. Here is the suffragists' circular printed by the way with the union label:

COME AND BRING YOUR FRIENDS

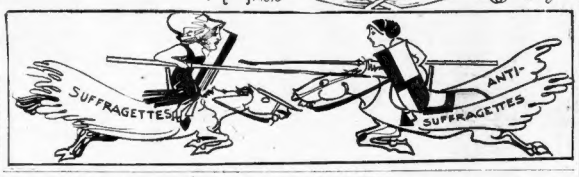
The suffragists were the first to invade Mattapoisett, but they have chosen to hold their Town Hall mass meeting last. Next Thursday night as per the poster, the anti-suffragists will meet in the Town Hall. They will try to have Mr. Hamlin introduce the speakers, who will be Miss Mary Agues of Boston, president of the Massachusetts Association of Anti-Suffragists, Mrs. George of Boston, a well known anti leader; Mrs. Augustine Pirker and Mrs. Codman of Brookline.

Miss Carpenter to Speak.

The speakers for the suffragist meeting will be former State Senator Roger Sherman Hoar and Miss Alice Carpenter of Boston.

Mrs. Lindsley Loring, anti-leader, who nearly opposite the home of Mrs. Curtis, lives nearly opposite the home of Mrs. Curtis, the suffragist leader, in a statement today outlined the position of the anti-suffragists as follows:

Women nowadays have something better to think of than voting. There are poor children who need clothing and an education, there are a thousand other things, such as settlement work and household problems that are arising that needs the attention of women more than the ballot box. For instance, women are allowed to vote on the school committee question, but right here in Massachusetts only two per cent. of the women avail themselves of the privilege."



KILLED THE PANIER.

Parisians Said "They Are for Women of Fifty."

PARIS, July 20.—The dressmakers of Rue de la Paix may rule the feminine part of the world, but people of Paris with undisputed power but their autocracy comes to a very abrupt end in Paris if their decrees clash with the fundamental sense of beauty of the Parisiennes, and they have just been taught a lesson. A few months ago the kings of the mode decided that women this year must wear panniers and their mannequins went out to publish their decrees, but the Parisienne immediately said: "Jamais de la vie. Paniers are for women of fifty." And, of course, the Parisienne never goes to be fifty. She always stops at thirty-nine, unless the grandchild is too obviously grown up.

Thinks Roosevelt Is Emergency President

In Event of Death T. R. Would Be Head, Automatically, Says New Citizen.

CHICAGO, July 20.—John Roach's knowledge of this government was tested when he applied for his papers as a full-fledged American citizen, with this question:

"In the event of the death of the President of the United States who would take his place?"

"Roosevelt," promptly replied Roach.

"Well, he did once," replied the Judge with a smile and he signed the applicant's papers.

MRS. FISH WINS IN NEWPORT DANCE WAR

Festivities End at Midnight Saturday at Mrs. Vanderbilt's Fete.

NEWPORT, July 20.—Supporters of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish in her fight to cut out early Sunday morning dancing, tonight declared they and won their "Armageddon" when they learned that Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt had engaged the orchestra only until midnight for her dinner and dance in honor of Miss Mary Shreve Ames of Boston. The society event at Mrs. Vanderbilt's Summer home, "Harbourview," tonight was regarded as the crisis in the crusade made by the society's matrons against Sunday festivities.

Since the dinner and dance was first announced early in the week society people in the Summer colony wondered if the dancing would really stop at midnight. Today they were told that Mrs. Vanderbilt had hired Professor Henry Cunard's Orchestra for three hours only. The musicians were to play for the dinner from 9 till 11, and then for the dance 11 until 12 o'clock. It was understood the dances would be stopped sharply on the hour of midnight.

Some of the members of the younger set appeared tonight and declared they favored continuing the Saturday night dances till the early hours of Sunday. They declared the matrons would succeed only in making Newport slow and life dull for the younger folk.

At a recent gathering of the society matrons, they decided it was best to stop all Saturday night dances at midnight. One reason for this was said to be the notoriety the social leaders were securing in fae newspapers.

HUNT JAIL BREAKERS.

Believe Fugitives Have Made Numerous Breaks in Maine.

KENNEBUNKPORT, Me., July 20.—Citizens have organized to search the Ira Merrill woods for the four burglars who escaped from Portland jail last week. The men are believed to be responsible for the large number of breaks here and in Kennebunk, and are also believed to be responsible for the break into the office of the Atlantic Shore Line Railway office yesterday. The five men arrested on suspicion were found to be harmless and each was fined one dollar and costs. A are from Lawrence, Mass. Two of them, Daniel Monahan and Charles Connors, are boys, and in response to a message from City Marshal Sullivan of Lawrence, will be held until their parents are notified of their plight.

MITCHELL MEETS BROTHER.

Labor Man at Reunion, the First in Twenty-One Years.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 20.—John Mitchell, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, met his brother, Robert Mitchell, today for the first time in twenty-one years. The meeting took place in the Hotel Oregon. The long lost brother has been residing at Merrill, Klamath County, Oregon. The last time they met was at Spring Valley, Ill., twenty-one years ago.

TALK MILK BOYCOTT.

Advance in Price Stirs Up Middleboro People.

MIDDLEBORO, July 20.—Housekeepers are planning a milk strike. The price goes up on Aug. 1 from 8 cents to 10 cents per quart. Many housekeepers say they will use canned condensed milk before they will pay the high prices. A call for a meeting soon here it is impossible to get fresh milk at any price, and canned milk is being used freely.

John M. Deeir, Malden street commissioner, was bitten by a dog yesterday when on the way to City Hall. Mayor Farrell, who is a physician, cauterized the wound. The police are hunting the dog.

Boy Who Found $6000 Gem Gets New Suit

Also Starts a Newport Bank Account from Mrs. Ellis' $100 Reward.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 20.—Lattie David Stewart, the boy who found Mrs. Ralph S. Ellis' diamond and sapphire studded bracelet, now has a bank account and a new outfit of clothing. The silverined reward of $100 was promptly paid.

David's mother, Mrs. Richard M. Stewart, said today:

"The bracelet was nothing to David, but it was worth between $6,000 and $8,000.

"People with lots of money don't always realize how much difference even a hundred dollars can make to one somelimes.

"Seventy-five dollars of the money has been put in the bank to help educate David. We hope to make something out of him."

With the rest of the money David gets a new outfit of clothing. And there are plenty of other ways to use it, for that matter, for there are five girls in the family besides the sharpeyed boy who found the lost jewelry.

Mrs. Ellis has been visiting Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt. She lost her bracelet on ocean drive. David found it and brought it straight home to his mother, saying "See how shiny this is."

H. J. Carlson Appointed.

Mayor Burns of Somerville yesterday elected Harry J. Carlson of Carlson & Coolidge as the consulting architect for the $125,000 addition to the Somerville High School. Carlson will make the award for the addition to the architect that makes the most satisfactory and practical plan from the specifications prepared for the competition.

CADETS BACK AFTER WEEK OF CAMP LIFE

Cheered on Return to Armory by Big Crowds Along Route of March.

The First Corps of Cadets, under Lieutenant-Colonel Franklin L. Joy, broke camp yesterday at Bingham, returning to their armory in Boston by boat from Crow Point. The corps paraded up State street to Washington, to School, to Tremont, to Boylston, to Park square, and there to the armory. Along the line of march the cadets were greeted with cheers that lined the streets.

The Second Corps of Cadets broke camp yesterday at Boxford, returning to the armory in Salem. Both corps have been under canvas a week and have worked out a number of important military problems. At Camp Edwards in Bingham, the Corps was inspected by Governor Foss.

BASS HEADS MOOSE CHICAGO DELEGATES

New Hampshire Roosevelt Men Hold Conference and Denounce Taft.

> The great thing our New Hampshire progressives did yesterday up at Manchester was to repudiate the action of the convention at Chicago last month. This, in the eyes of every honest man—whatever party he belongs to—was a step in advance, for the reason that it brands dishonesty and fraud as something we Americans will not stand for.
> Robert P. Bass.

MANCHESTER, N. H., July 20.—There was a meeting in Masonic Hall from 11 a. m. to 3 p. m. today of all who have supported Theodore Roosevelt in the Republican primaries in New Hampshire.

Three hundred [illegible] were present, mostly Republicans. The majority was made up of well-to-do farmers.

They chose four delegates to attend the Bull Moose convention at Chicago on August 5. The four delegates are:

Governor Robert P. Bass of Peterborough.
Dr. W. T. Beattie of Littleton.
William Savacool of Manchester.
H. O. Prime of Portsmouth.
The alternates are:
Willis G. Buxton of Boscawen.
S. O. Titus of Rollinsford.
Major Harry G. Blake of Concord.
Warren C. Brown of Troy.

While this was accomplished, and while the meeting was enthusiastic and unanimously in favor of Colonel Roosevent, the bigger part of the four hours was taken up in the question of breaking entirely away and of making a third party.

Taft "Not Lawful Candidate."

The decision of the convention after all discussion, was that Taft is not the nominee of the Republican party and that, in that situation, it is the duty of Mr. Roosevelt's followers to vote for Roosevelt electors.

The meeting began by adopting these resolutions:

> Resolved, that by reason of the fraudulent unseating of legally electtd delegates to the Republican national convention, William H. Taft is not a lawful and rightful candidate of the Republican party for the presidency and is not entitled to and should not receive the support of anybody.
> Resolved, that a list of presidential electors who will support Theodore Roosevelt should be placed upon the ballot in the State by petition and that a committee of ten, one from each county, be appointed to secure such a list and to prepare, circulate and file the necessary petition.

These two resolutions were drafted by ex-Mayor John E. Benton of Keene, member of the Public Utilities Commission. They were adopted unanimously. In fact, every vote of the day was unanimous.

Denounce Regular Organization.

Between the first and the second of the two Benton resolutions, however, Clarence E. Clough of Lebanon got the meeting to unanimously adopt a resolution of his preparing which read like this:

> Resolved—That any party organization that shall countenance such fraudulent action as took place at Chicago is no more entitled to the confidence and support of the voters of any State than its candidate for the Presidency.

The big talk of the day came when Walter H. Lewis of Manchester, Independence League candidate for Governor four years ago, insisted that followers of Roosevelt should go the entire distance and put a complete third party ticket in the field.

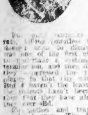
S. O. Titus of Rollinsford, one of the delegates who is going to the Bull Moose convention in Chicago, agreed with Lewis, but toned the Lewis resolution down a little. Then E. C. Niles of Concord, Judge Remick of Concord, Governor Bass and some of the other leaders talked at length about how much the progressives have accomplished in New Hampshire and the physical difficulties in the way of a third party movement in the State, and finally, just before adjournment at 3 o'clock, everybody got together in a love-feast, stopped using the words "third party" and unanimously adopted this closing resolution:

Committee of Ten.

> RESOLVED—That it is the sense of this meeting that a Progressive State organization should be formed with a State committee appointed with instructions to file such nominations for State officers as may be deemed practical.

The State committee, which will be a large body, will be named by the same committee of ten (one from each county), which is to pick the Bull Moose candidates for electors. This committee of ten will be announced early in the week by Chairmen Robert L. Manning of today's meeting.

Rat Catching Is an Ancient Occupation



The business of catching rats and mice is centuries old. In London hundreds of years ago it was followed by men and women, who gloried in the title of rat and mice catcher to his majesty or to the royal family. They made themselves such a nuisance to people that they were forbidden to use the name of royalty to advertise their business.

The calling was handed down in the family from one generation to another.

For many centuries man has waged war on rats, killing countless thousands, yet the supply doesn't seem to diminish any. San Francisco was one of the first cities in the United States to undertake a systematic campaign of rat extermination, and they did their work so well that they suppressed the two outbreaks of bubonic plague in that city without a large loss of life. But I haven't the least doubt if the war against the rodents hasn't been pressed with vigor since then that they have almost as many rats now as they ever did.

Fumigation and traps are good for only a restricted area. The best results in rat killing are obtained by the use of special preparations of real merit, which can be spread over a wide territory. Martin's Rat Powder is a standard preparation for killing rats which is generally used throughout New England with very successful results. Sold by druggists and department stores everywhere for 25c and $1.00, or by mail for 30c and $1.10. [illegible] different powders for other [illegible] same kind when ordering.

May Yohe, Heart-Broken, in Boston Vaudeville

Actress Now Regrets Break with Lord Hope

Singer Who Married Titled Britisher Again Appearing at Picture Shows.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

MAY YOHE, the woman who first married a Lord, queened it in noble circles, juggled carelessly with millions, is now singing in moving picture vaudeville and cabaret shows about Boston.

Last week she was at a moving picture theatre on Washington street. This week she is booked at the Paragon Park cabaret show.

From poverty to Hopes, and back again, has been the much-traveled road of her career—but out of it all has come a woman with a clear knowledge of her mistakes, a world of sympathy for those who may make the same ones she has made, and deep regret that she ever made them.

"But I'm human—we're all human," she says, "and, being so, are liable to do things in moments of thoughtlessness which we may regret all the rest of our lives."

"What advice then would you give a young girl just starting out in the world?" I asked her as we sat in her dressing room and watched her make the final preparations for her part in the performance.

"I should say to every girl 'Seek your mother's advice in everything. She is older and wiser and knows the world and its pitfalls, and best of all she loves you and would never guide you wrong.' If I had listened to my mother when I was younger, with the deference experience has taught me to listen to her now I should still be Lady Hope."

"But if girls have no mothers," I argued.

"Then they should do the thing which they think their mother would wish them to do, and they will always be on the right road."

Thinking of her marital troubles, I asked her if she thought all girls should marry, to which she replied emphatically:

"By all means. God created girls to get married, and that for the most part is their greatest safeguard."

"Then you don't believe as you say in your sketch that when a woman marries she pawns herself and then loses the ticket?"

"No. love is the greatest, highest, most beautiful and most wonderful thing in the world and married life the very happiest and most ennobling sphere for any woman."

"But there are so many unhappy marriages," I complained.

"That is due to the fact that many girls, and men, too, are taken by the glitter. They're like the Indians who, when white men first landed in America, sold their best possessions for a few gaudy beads and some glittering trinkets. And so with many men and women—they are caught by the superficial glitter. Some men might marry the girl who could do the 'Turkey Trot' well, but when it comes to making soup it's a different matter.

"My kitten, too, is caught by the glitter of things," and she cuddled closer to her pet cat "Buster," which is her mascot, having strayed in from the street and found a welcome with this tender-hearted woman.

Married Happiness.

"What makes a happy marriage? I think the greatest, the most important thing is compatibility of temperament. Then they must work together, and above all, be pals. Yes, marriage is the one and only thing for girls.

"But so many of them are taken in by a man with a handsome face and charming manners. I would say to all girls, avoid the handsome man, the man with the fine physique and the superficial manners.

"Lord Hope was not what might be called a handsome man but he was a distinguished man, while Mr. Strong was, by all means, handsome. At that time I was too foolish to look deeper than the surface and see the difference. Lord Hope was all that one might wish a husband to be. He was and is a prince among men, but my real appreciation of him comes too late, as does that of many another woman."

And she looked way out into the forests to the blue sky—painted on the scenery outside—and was for a moment lost in thought. But her lustrous brown eyes were full upon me again when I asked if she didn't suppose it might all come out right again and she go back to him.

"Oh, no dear, he's married now and has three beautiful children and is very happy, just as he deserves to be." And I blushed at my ignorance.

"What advice would you give to husbands in regard to making a happy home?"

"I would say to all husbands, 'Don't be too indulgent.' There must be a head to every family, and the husband is the rightful one. A girl is made selfish by too much indulgence, and she doesn't usually give the over-indulgent husband the proper amount of respect. It's pretty much a game of give and take, and both should give equally and unselfishly. The man who gives all need expect nothing in return, for he is spoiling the girl and training her to be selfish. In that case he has no one to blame for the ultimate unhappiness but himself.

"A woman, in order to hold her husband's love, must be his pal, and above all bend her every effort to try and please him. If she doesn't some other woman will. A man likes to be made much of, and the genuine kind of man won't be spoiled by it."

"Yes, but with lots of men, when they really know a girl cares for them they lose interest," I insisted. "What's that about a man not running for a car when he's caught it?" I queried.

Prizes Real Love.

"But those aren't the real men, the big, noble, genuine kind. The real man when he finds real love prizes it above all else in the world and the girl or wife need never be afraid to let this sort of man look deep into her heart and see the wealth of love there all for him.

"As I said before it's a game of give and take and one must strive to please just as hard as the other, for a woman's fancy is as capricious as a man's. In so many cases the girls are too young when they marry to really know the right kind of man from the wrong kind. Many of them are flighty and still more of them are selfish and very often we have the combination, and that's a hard combination for any man to be compelled to put up with. Some girls at fourteen have the sense of a woman of forty, so it really isn't so much age as reckoned in years as it is temperament or intellect that counts."

"You believe in divorce, of course," I half questioned.

"I certainly do. My advice would be 'If you can't get along, get out. Don't argue and don't go back, for the minute doubt creeps in it's never the same and there's no use trying to make it so.'"

"You also believe in re-marriage?"

"I certainly do. 'If at first you don't succeed try, try again' is a good motto to follow there as elsewhere. You may strike the right man the first time. Some do. They should thank their lucky stars and proceed to be happy. You may strike him the second time. You're a little more careful in choosing the second time—that is, most people are, I wasn't. But about the third time, you don't make the venture unless you're very sure and when you're very sure before, you're bound to be very happy after."

"How is the average girl to know which will make the good husband and which won't?"

Good Son, Good Husband.

"Let her see some of his home life. A good son always makes a good husband. Then beware of the man who 'gets by' on his good looks and rather choose the man with heart and brains and a congenial disposition."

"What is the greatest regret of your life—what one great thing would you change over if you were to live your life again?" I asked, and promptly she replied:

"My one great regret is that I ever left Lord Hope, for as I said before he was a prince among men. If I had my life to live over again I should still be Lady Hope." And again her beautiful eyes wandered out through the scenery and her gaze clung to the one bright spot on the scene and I wondered just what sort of picture it was that she saw and just what she was thinking. Of a life so full, so tragically overflowing with bitterness and disappointment there still remained a little of the sweet. But most of the sweet was in memory. This I knew when she turned to me again with a sad, hopeless little shake of her well poised head. I knew her thoughts had been with Lord Hope—the man whom she loved and didn't realize she loved until they were hopelessly lost to one another, and I know that many times she contrasts the life she might be leading as Lady Hope, a peeress, with the life she is leading as May Yohe, the vaudeville star.

LOTTIE COLLINS, JR., USES HER NAILS

Scratches an Admirer Who Had Aroused Her Jealousy Aboard Ship.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—The staid English passengers, who arrived in this city on the Royal Mail steamship Manuka, were treated to an exhibition of temperament three nights before the vessel reached port that shocked them into speechlessness.

The story was told in whispers with many wary glances at the temperamental one, everyone apparently fearing that he or she might inadvertently displease her and serve as a vent for her tempestuous displeasure.

The evening everyone talked about was one of those beautiful moonlight nights encountered off the south coast. All the first-class passengers had assembled on the rear deck, where a moonlight dance had been arranged.

Rivals Aboard Ship.

Miss Lottie Collins, daughter and namesake of the English music hall singer, who introduced into this country the song "Tara-ra-boom-de-ay," which so tickled the fancies of a past generation, was selected to play the music.

Among the men passengers was Frank Armstrong, a wealthy English coffee planter of Porto Rico, who had been on a two-year visit to his home in England and was returning by way of the colony possessions.

Armstrong and Dr. H. M. Hall of Los Angeles, who had been on an extended tour of Australia, had been rivals for tete-a-tetes with Miss Collins, who is a dark, vivacious beauty, with large blue-gray eyes.

Armstrong, according to Dr. Hall's admission, had made the most headway in the regard of Miss Collins.

Girl Arouses Anger.

All went well with the moonlight dance until Armstrong selected as his partner Miss Lillian Hale, a society girl of Christ Church, who with Mrs. Florence Beswick, daughter of Sir James Mills, is on a pleasure jaunt to this country.

Armstrong and Miss Mills had made only a couple of turns around the deck, when Miss Collins, looking up from the piano, spied them. There is blood of the Latin races in her veins, and it revealed itself.

With a gasp and a kerplunk on most of the keyboard at one time, which caused a discord well in keeping with her flashing eyes and mantling cheeks, she was on her feet. She made a mad rush for Armstrong and Miss Hale.

"How dare you!" she cried, glaring at Armstrong and Miss Hale.

And then she made a grab at Armstrong. Her hands closed upon his necktie and with a sudden jerk she tore it from around his neck.

Then she started to laugh hysterically. The onlookers, hearing her laughter, thought it was all a joke.

Miss Collins went back to the piano and started another waltz.

Armstrong and Miss Hale once more glided off. This was too much for the impetuous Miss Collins, who considered herself slighted. Once more she ran to Armstrong.

"You will, will you!" she screamed. "You will ask me to play the piano and then dance with another woman! Take that, and that, and that!"

Mrs. Belmont Ready to Scrub for "the Cause"

Rich Suffragist Buys Soap, Towel and Fly Paper, Cost 23 Cents, for Newport Headquarters.

NEWPORT, July 20.—Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, the famous suffragist leader, after purchasing the supplies for the new "Votes for Women" headquarters this afternoon, declared she would willingly "scrub the floor" if it would help the "cause."

"Push is what the cause needs," added the wealthy suffragist.

Here are the supplies Mrs. Belmont bought at a nearby store and took to suffrage headquarters:

One bar soap (large)...	8 cents
One crash towel.......	10 cents
Two sheets fly-paper...	5 cents
Total.................	23 cents

Mrs. Belmont said to Miss Hill, the new secretary:

"The time for hesitation is past. I would willingly scrub the floor for the cause, rather than stand back and see what some hypercritical person is going to say. Only those that are willing to take hold and help us in the cause are of very much service."

Kingston Girl Goes West to Be a Bride

To Wed Tech Graduate Who Went Ahead to Seek Fortune in Far Away Oregon.

KINGSTON, July 20.—When Robert E. Cushman, with his "Tech" sheepskin in his pocket, left here recently for Oregon, where he had employment as an electrical engineer, he whistled a tune about "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

That little girl is Miss Alice Blanchard, and she is a bookkeeper in the store of Robert's father, George E. Cushman. She is a graduate of the Brockton High School and very popular.

Miss Blanchard received a letter not long ago from Robert asking her to join him at Portland next month and he would have the clergyman and the little home in the Great Northwest all ready for her.

"I'll be there, Robert," wrote Alice.

So when Mildred and Ethel Bryant, her dear friends, heard of it a few evenings ago they arranged a delightful party at their home for her. There were all sorts of useful presents for a girl who is about to begin housekeeping for herself.

Miss Blanchard is being congratulated on the spirit she has shown in agreeing to make the long journey to meet her fiance.

Mrs. Morrow Gets Congratulations

Friends Write and Phone Woman Cleared of Charge of Killing Her Husband.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Club members, society women and other friends have sent or telephoned congratulations today to Mrs. Rene B. Morrow, poet and church worker, on being acquitted of the charge of murdering her husband, Charles B. Morrow, the eccentric inventor, by shooting.

On December 27 Morrow was found frozen on the back porch of his home, with a revolver at his side and a bullet in his head. A coroner's inquest decided it was suicide, but the police persisted Mrs. Morrow had slain her husband. The police finally forced a trial. The hearings were dramatic. Mrs. Morrow was constantly attended by sister members of the Order of the Eastern Star, members of the Forty-first Street Presbyterian Church and of clubs with which she is associated.

The case went to the jury last night. Late at night, after three hours' deliberation, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. The women spectators kissed and hugged Mrs. Morrow.

DETECTIVES BRING WHITESIDE HOME

Roxbury Man Charged With Impersonating Brother and Securing Money.

Across the continent from Los Angeles came two Boston detectives yesterday with Frank J. Whiteside, formerly of No. 61 Ceylon street, Roxbury, as a prisoner. The prisoner was locked up in the Charles Street jail.

The charge against Whiteside is that he impersonated his brother, Charles T. Whiteside, of the same Roxbury address, and obtained $2,825 on property that he mortgaged. From Sumner Robinson of Newton, it is charged, he secured $2,000 on a first mortgage and from a man named Farrington, $825 on a second mortgage. The first transaction, it is asserted, took place on January of last year, and the second on September 8, last. Then the young man disappeared and was located at Long Beach, near Los Angeles.

Whiteside was brought from California by Detectives McCauley and Dennessy. Two sisters of the prisoner went to Police Headquarters to meet Whiteside, but he was taken directly to the Charles Street Jail and they missed seeing him. They were Mrs. Agnes Russell of Hancock street, Dorchester, and Mrs. Josephine Miller of New Hampshire.

C. L. U. TODAY DISCUSSES MOVE FOR GENERAL STRIKE; L UNION MEN'S STATEMENT

With the question of a general strike among the 20,000 trade unionists of this city to be passed upon at the Central Labor Union meeting today, the executive committee of the Central Labor Union met in secret session to draft the recommendations for presentation at the meeting today.

Neither of the conclusions officially would advise whether a general strike would be asked for immediately. It was asserted by several, unofficially, however, that such action was highly improbable until the central body first had exhausted every means to secure a settlement of the strike on the Elevated itself. The statement of the street railway men follows:

Carmen's Statement.

"In the seventh week of the strike, with 5,000 men still out, we have reached the most critical stage of the struggle.

"The Central Labor Union, at its meeting tomorrow, will officially declare what its future course shall be as regards the question of a general strike.

"This question will not only be determined by the delegates. Neither are men and officers of individual unions forever which will be done at that meeting. But we do feel confident that as trade unionists they will not stand idly by and see our organization crushed, out of existence by the power of combination capital.

"In the meantime, with the report of the State Board of Arbitration not at present available, it would be impossible that it can be other than favorable to us, we are still further handicapped from giving a free expression of opinion at this time. Courtesy toward the board demands that we refrain from interfering in any way with the board's investigation, and we therefore decline to make any statement pending investigation of the Grand Jury.

"We have always been willing, and it is needless to state that we are still willing, to meet with and confer with any investigation possible to this matter. We have nothing to fear.

Blames Bancroft.

"As an organization we have no desire to see a general strike in this city. Neither did we wish to bring about a strike of our own members. The same element that forced us into a strike, however, by despotic and un-American action in refusing a conference while sleeping is the agent in organize another strike among the 20,000 trade unionists of Boston and its immediate vicinity. If a general strike is called, it will be forced on the community by General Bancroft and his associates.

"When organizations representing large aggregations of capital entered this fight to support the Boston Elevated Company, General Bancroft and his colleagues thought it was a fight of class. The fight soon found that time we became not only the fight of the street carmen, but of all organized labor.

"Several weeks ago we pointed out publicly this fact. We published a statement that if this fight should be continued along the line the powers behind the Boston Elevated were directing it that it would, of necessity, become a general fight, for no trade unionist could then tell which organization would be the next attacked and annihilated.

"In common with all trade unionists we want industrial peace. To that end we have submitted without solicitation differences to arbitration. That offer still remains open. All overtures of peace have been rejected by the Elevated Company and the organization of capital backing it.

Right to Organize.

"They brought on the present struggle and seem determined to have it continued. Even today, they maintain they have the legal and moral right to discharge men for joining a union.

"Can organized labor consistently stand by and see this precedent established?

"This is the question to be dealt with by the delegates of the Central Labor Union at its meeting tomorrow."

The findings of the State Board of Arbitration, which has been investigating the strike for four weeks, who are expected to be made public by Tuesday at the latest.

Interest in the legal phase of the Elevated strike now centres in the action of District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier, who is preparing to present to a special Grand Jury evidence which strikers declare they have against the Elevated and some of its officials.

Evidence so charges of perjury and violations of the statutes regarding the rights of employes to join a labor organization will be sought.

Here are the names of the grand jurors, their business and places of residence:

Mott and Mrs. Bowne Caught Intercepted at Hong Kong

MRS. WALTER BOWNE, WHO ELOPED WITH J. L. MOTT

HONG KONG, July 20.—Hector Fuller, former war correspondent, who has for weeks been trailing Jordan Lawrence Mott, 3d, heir to the millions left by his grandfather, founder of the Mott Iron Works of New York, overtook the latter here.

Fuller was engaged at a high salary as kind of guardian for Mott, but the latter gave him the slip some time ago, and on May 18 shipped from New York as purser on the tramp steamship Indradeo, bound for China. On the same boat were sailed, booked as a steward-ess to evade the anti-passenger carrying law, Mrs. Walter Browne, wife of a wealthy Long Island man, to whom it was believed Mott was attached.

The former war correspondent gave chase and arrived at successive ports in the Mediterranean, the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean only a few hours behind his quarry. It is uncertain, however, what he can do with his men now that he has caught him. Mott says he is going to settle in Japan.

John Lawrence Mott, 3d, son of Lawrence Mott, of the Mott Iron Works, defeated a plan of his parents to send him around the world in a sailing vessel under the care of Fuller, war correspondent and soldier of fortune. This was first known on May 22, when it was admitted he had sailed the Saturday before on the British freighter Indradeo, bound for Hong Kong, by way of Gibraltar and the Suez Canal. He signed on the ship under the name of "L. Martin." On the same ship also was Miss Hewitt, an actress, wife of Walter Browne. She passed as "Mrs. Martin."

The Mott family started in pursuit, Mr. and Mrs. Mott sailing immediately on the North German Lloyd liner Kronprinz Wilhelm, Fuller caught the Marquesia a few hours later, hoping to intercept the young millionaire at Gibraltar.

Mott was equipped to keep ahead in the chase with $7,000 in cash and a letter of credit for $10,000.

Mott and Mrs. Browne arrived at Gibraltar on May 31. Standing on the Indradeo's freight strewn deck, her face tanned by the sun at sea, that day Mrs. Browne, besides the author-reporter-millionaire-expected, told the correspondents that she loved Mott and would die for him and that her love would not be affected by the loss of his millions.

SULTAN EXHORTS HIS ARMY TO BE LOYAL

Italian Flotilla Enters Dardanelles, but Retires Unharmed at Bombardment.

LONDON, July 20.—The only foundation of the report from Constantinople yesterday that the Turkish forts had sunk two Italian warships in the Dardanelles lies in the fact, it is now learned, that a flotilla of Italian torpedo boat destroyers attempted to enter the Straights, but on account of the severe bombardment from the forts, they were forced to retire. They were not damaged. The vessels succeeded in advancing to Chanakkalesi on the Orkhisle side of the Straights.

Despatches today from Constantinople say: The grave nature of the government's difficulties is revealed in a proclamation of the Sultan to the army which was read to the garrison there.

Sultan Exhorts Army

After announcing the appointment of Tewfik Pasha as grand vizier the proclamation reminds the troops of their oath of loyalty and, referring to demands made by certain officers as contrary to the constitution and supreme rights of the Khalifate, exhorts the army not to mix in politics, but to devote itself exclusively to the defence of the country. The proclamation concludes by pointing out that the officers' reasonable attitude had encouraged the enemy to the extent that the enemy dared last night to approach the very gates of the capital. This should constitute a warning."

The proclamation was preceded by a meeting of officers at the war office which delegated Nazim Pasha and Hadi Pasha to submit to the Sultan and the officers' demand for the dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies and the appointment of Kiamil Pasha as Grand Vizier.

Many Italian Warships Seen.

Press Dispatches from the Dardanelles assert that after the Italian torpedo boats which attacked the entrances of the Dardanelles early, retired, twenty-two large and small war vessels were sighted from the Straits, steaming a southerly course. These despatches add that five cruisers are still reported off the Dardanelles.

The Turkish government has decided to reduce the width of the free channel between the mine fields in the Dardanelles. In order, on the one hand, to permit a continuous navigation and, on the other, to increase the defences of the Straits.

As a result of the promise of the Turkish government to dispatch a peace commission composed of three Albanian senators, to Albegia to endeavor to persuade the rebels to suspend hostilities, the Albanians have decided to lay down their arms, which will relieve the government of a difficult internal situation.

MIDDLEBORO, July 20.—A telephone romance will bring about a wedding Monday, when Miss Mildred Glidden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Atmon Glidden and chief operator at the local exchange, will be married to Joseph Westgate, who has had charge of the test room at the same exchange.

She and Mr. Westgate are graduates of the local high school in the class of 1908. Mr. Westgate played football. Miss Glidden, as chief operator, when a line was out of order called Mr. Westgate.

The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Norman McKinnon of the Central Congregational Church, of which the bride-to-be is a member and where she sings, at the home of her parents on Court land street. The telephone girls will be present in a body.

$40,000 Bath House; No Water.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.—The city's beautiful new public bathhouse at Tacony is completed, but it cannot be used for a year, because in the construction of the building no provision was made for a water supply. The bathhouse represents an outlay of $40,000.

ORDERS TRANSFERS IN THE STATE POLICE

Made "For the Good of the Service," Declares Chief Whitney.

Many transfers of members of the boiler inspection department of the Massachusetts district police, have been made. It is said the transfers are the result of what amounted to insubordination in the department in the Spring.

Chief Johanna H. Whitney says:

"Orders have been issued from this office for the transfer of many of the men in that department. Why was it done? For the good of the service, of course."

"Did anything like insubordination in the past lead up these charges?" the chief was asked. "That is something I cannot discuss," he replied.

The men transferred are William W. Ramsay, who has been located in Worcester. He goes to Fall River. Inspector Harry E. Morton is transferred from the Boston office to take Inspector Ramsey's place in Worcester. Herbert A. Sullivan, who has been in Fall River, is assigned to Salem, taking the place of Inspector Charles Ferguson, who goes to Boston. Frank C. Hinckley, who has been doing special duty at Boston goes to North Adams.

It will be 100 feet high of white marble, with granite base, and include a bronze tablet recording Mr. Hanlon's prowess and a medallion of the head and shoulders of the late champion.

CHARGES LEAKS IN STEEL COMMITTEE

Stanley Declares Somebody Gave Out Information to Bear Stock Market.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Chairman Stanley of the steel investigating committee today made the charge that someone in the confidence of the committee had permitted tickets in the forthcoming steel report to the purpose of "beating" the stock market. In consequence of the publication today of important features of the report which were not to be made public for at this time, Chairman Stanley has peremptorily decided to have no more public proceedings and as far as the Democratic members of the committee agree to the ruling seems.

"There is a leak somewhere," said Stanley, "and I resolved I'll do it. I am the officer. I believe if one private accepts favors from the stock exchange there is somebody in every one more guilty."

The original intention of the steel Committee was to give out the report, which has, even subject to publication when printed in the house, but when no printed copies by members of the committee today that the proceeds are accurate and its principal recommendations will stand for drastic amendments to the Sherman law. The committee also said suggestions in connection that heretofore information published by the Bureau of corporations shall be available to the use of Congress. During the hearings Commissioner Herbert Knox Smith refused to make public certain information he had gathered regarding Steel Trust.

FRUIT TO BE CHEAP AND PLENTY OF IT

High Price Problem Will Be Solved Soon, if the Good Weather Holds Out.

Boston is just now almost wallowing in fruit, and with just a little more rain to temper the sun heat, not only Boston and New England, but all the country will see the greatest fruit year on record.

One of the leading men in the market district said yesterday afternoon that this is going to be the largest apple year in its recollection of more than thirty years as a fruit, and produce dealer, and the supply of peaches coming in now is at high tide.

During the past week no fewer than 142 cars of watermelons came to Boston from Georgia, 17 cars on Monday, 20 on Tuesday, 17 on Wednesday, 30 on Thursday and 20 on Saturday.

These sold all the way from 20 cents each to $1.75 a ride in the whole sale markets. The highest priced were hand picked, pre-cooled peaches.

"Others," said this market man, "are able to be cheap and plenty, so will polarize. In fact, everything in our line is going to be plentiful and good, provided the weather keeps right, that we have no more of downpourings of rain or some bad wind, either of which, of course, would ruin everything.

"Just now the price of meat went up the people with the smaller incomes have been eating more eggs. This has caused eggs to be scarcer and higher than they usually are at this time.

"There is a whole lot to this question of costly living," said the produce merchant.

CAMBRIDGE CARNIVAL.

Merchants Plan for Gay Time for Week in Fall.

Beginning September 30 and ending October 4, there will be big doings in Cambridge, for at that time the Cambridge Retail Merchants' Carnival Week is to be held.

F. W. Prescott of Medford, who had charge of last year's carnival, will be in charge. A feature will be an exhibition in the armory by the manufacturers. Displays of a more extensive type than last year are being planned.

Particular attention will be given to music for the street as well as for the construction of booths and stands that will line Massachusetts avenue. The work of the placing and renting of all booths will be under the supervision of a special committee and all vocal music on Massachusetts avenue from Central square to the railroad crossing will be placed under the committee's control.

The executive committee of the Retail Merchants' Association is as follows: H. W. Colton, chairman; John H. Corcoran, Earl E. Calver, Thomas Clarke, George L. Fraleigh, Harris Ginsburg, R. E. Higgins, William P. Hill, O. C. Moller, Lewis H. Phillips, Andrew H. Reid and Woolford Yorke. Andrew Heslin and D. M. Prescott will have charge of the decorations. The publicity committee consists of O. C. Moller, R. T. Elmore, Harry H. Mahoney and C. Burnside Savage. E. R. Talbot is chairman of the advertising committee.

PORTLAND, Me., July 20.—The body of George H. Seifort of the firm of Haskins & Seifort of this city, who was drowned June 30, has been recovered off Cushing Island. Mr. Seifort was drowned while returning from Cushings Island with three others. As far as known he has no relatives here.

CAMBRIDGE CAR ABLAZE.

Crowded at the Time and There Was Excitement.

A crowded outward bound North Cambridge car caught fire in the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Linwood street, North Cambridge, early last night, causing considerable excitement. An alarm was rung, which brought the fire apparatus. Traffic was delayed ten minutes.

The City of Everett is to have fifty new fire alarm boxes of the keyless door, non-interference, succession ringing pattern. The fifty boxes cost $2,250.

GOT HIS SIGNS MIXED.

"Elm Street" Board on High Street Arouses Idlers' Ill.

MARBLEHEAD, July 20.—The residents of Idlers' Hill section deny that they are a cursed and perverse generation that seeketh for a sign" but they allow that when they do get a sign they want it right.

A street department employe, putting up new street signs, put up one reading "Elm Street" on High street. Idlers' Hill residents came out and told the man he was wrong in his signs, but the workman held to his signs and after his disputants. He called the sign up and left it.

A protest to the authorities was later conveyed to the workman who put the sign where it belongs.

WOMAN ATTACKS ASQUITH.

Suffragette Hurls Bag of Flour at British Premier.

DUBLIN, July 20.—Another attack was made on Premier Asquith here today by a suffragette. The woman hurled a paper bag of flour at the statesman, which however missed its mark and burst, powdering men and women nearby. The woman was arrested and hurried away by the police, who feared the people would lynch her. There is a feeling of deep resentment here against suffrage violence because of the manner in which the Premier is held for his home rule fight.

WOULD MAKE CANAL FREE.

John Barrett's Idea, "the Greatest Good to All."

LONDON, July 20.—John Barrett, director-general of the Pan-American Union, referring to the Panama Canal in an address before the Chamber of Commerce, said:

"If I had my way I would make the canal essentially free to vessels of all nations, on the idea of the greatest good to the greatest number, toll is, have the tolls based absolutely on the cost of operation and the same to every flag.

NEWBURYPORT, July 20.—The entire fighting force of the city responded to a two-alarm fire in the factory of the Newburyport Broom Company, a four-story structure, at noon today. The proprietors could not estimate the loss, but with the stock on hand and the damage to the machinery it will be heavy. All the employes of the factory escaped.

Grace, Borne to Court, Will Accuse Wife From Invalid Chair, Aids the Prosecution

Mrs. Grace Denies Guilt and Says She Did Not Need $27,000 Insurance.

TRIAL WILL STARTLE SOUTH

ATLANTA, July 20.—What promises to be one of the most startling trials ever held in this city will open next Monday when Mrs. Daisy Ulrich Opie Grace will be brought into court, charged with shooting her husband, Eugene H. Grace, on March 3 last, as he lay asleep in his home in this city.

The chief feature of the trial will be the presence of the accusing husband, who will sit in the courtroom in an invalid chair, with the lower part of his body paralyzed, telling in the presence of his wife, who, he says, shot him to obtain $27,000 insurance he had taken out on his life for her benefit. Grace is very bitter against his wife, and declares he will do all in his power to punish her.

"If it costs me the life that is coming back to me, I am going to be at the trial to help put behind the bars the woman who tried to kill me," he said. "And after that I will divorce her, so that she may never again call herself by the name of Grace. These two things I will do or die in doing them.

"Daisy Grace comes to trial Monday and my doctor says that I will still be paralyzed then—that there is little hope that I will be able to move my lower

MRS. DAISY OPIE GRACE AND HER HUSBAND

Mrs. Daisy Grace, the wife, says:

I am innocent. I always have loved my husband. I still love him. To accuse me of trying to kill him is a monstrous injustice.

Eugene Grace, the husband:

My wife shot me to get the $27,000 insurance on my life. My first ambition is to prosecute her, and that is the reason I am so anxious to get well. I shall be in court Monday.

body or my limbs for months to come. But I know that if I am at that trial she will be convicted of murder. I have prevented my testifying against her, and so I have already ordered the invalid's chair that will carry me to Atlanta, and I am going to lie in the court room, by my lawyer's side to help them prove her guilt from her own lips.

"She Wanted the Insurance."

"That prosecution is my first ambition. It is why I am trying so hard to get well. That woman shot me while I slept because she thought she saw a way to get the $27,000 life insurance policy that I had taken at her own request.

"She duped me into marrying her. She was clever in the way of those adventuresses who have had such experience beneath the white lights. I was less experienced. I brought her to Atlanta, and she could not be satisfied after the life of New York. I did my best to make her happy. But she tired of me.

"She could not care for one man alone, so she thought she saw her way to be rid of me, and at the same time win for herself a fortune and a free return to the White Way, that she loves. And while I slept she shot me. Could a woman do anything worse in God's sight or man's? Do you wonder that I am going to live to see her put behind prison bars? And do you wonder that when she has been convicted I am going to sue her for divorce, as soon as I have lived in the State a year?"

Story of the Shooting.

The circumstances surrounding this strange case necessarily give it a romantic air of mystery.

Shortly after 12 o'clock on Tuesday, March 5, the police headquarters of Atlanta received a feeble call for help over the telephone. A number of policemen were dispatched to the home of Eugene H. Grace, where the call came from, and they found every outside door of the house securely locked. Forcing an entrance they made their way to an upper bedroom. There they found Grace lying unconscious with a bullet wound in his side. On further search they discovered a revolver, with one chamber empty, lying on the floor in the room immediately below the one in which Grace was lying. After Grace was revived he said he had been shot while he was asleep, sometime during the early part of the morning, and that he had every reason to believe that his wife had done it.

Then it was learned that Mrs. Grace had left the house sometime during the day and had gone to Newnan, Ga., to visit her mother-in-law.

That evening Mrs. Grace was arrested at Newnan and brought back to Atlanta. On facing her husband, the latter directly accused her of shooting him and leaving him to die alone.

Mrs. Grace told him unless he withdrew the accusation she would take the power of attorney which he exercised away from him. This threat seemed to have the desired effect, for Grace at once declared that he must be mistaken.

The power of attorney, the threatened removal of which caused Grace to withdraw the accusation for the time being, was in regard to the mortgaging of Philadelphia property that Mrs. Grace had received from her former husband. Grace was to have gone to Philadelphia on the day he was shot to arrange for the mortgage.

Mrs. Grace admits that she did not leave her husband until after 11 o'clock on March 5. She said that her husband had complained of not feeling well, but she supposed he would soon recover from the indisposition and start for Philadelphia in the afternoon as planned. She says she went to Newnan to see her husband's mother and to join the former on a later train, and go on to Philadelphia with him.

On the other hand, Grace says that he awoke about 6 o'clock in the morning with a burning sensation in his side. He didn't know what the matter was with him and requested his wife to call a doctor. He says Mrs. Grace made a pretense of going to the telephone and calling up a physician, but that she never took the receiver from the hook. On the contrary, she stuffed cotton in the instrument to prevent it from ringing.

Drugged Before He Was Shot.

Grace charges his wife with having drugged him before shooting him. This, he says, accounts for the fact that neither the report nor the pain accompanying the shot wakened him.

The motive for the crime, as held by the prosecution, was to obtain the $27,000 life insurance policy on her husband's life, of which she was the beneficiary. In reply to this the attorneys for Mrs. Grace say that client never was wealthy in her own right and had no need of the insurance money. They also claim that she is not the type of woman capable of such a deed and state that she was genuinely in love with her husband and he with her until outside influences began to work on his mind.

The courtship of Eugene H. Grace and his wife, who is about twenty years his senior, was as spectacular as it was brief. Mrs. Grace was the widow of William H. Opie, a wealthy Philadelphia tailor. Before his death from blood poison in February, 1911, his wife had already become known as "Daisy of the Leopard Skins," because of her mania for coats made from the skin of that animal. After the death of her husband, from whom she inherited $100,000, Mrs. Grace became a conspicuous figure in Philadelphia. About this time she met Grace and a mutual attraction sprung up. As a result Grace married her in New York, at the Little Church Around the Corner, less than one month after the death of her former husband.

Grace, at that time, was a bond salesman, who had ambition to become a building contractor. Finding his wife disposed to further her this ambition, he took his bride to Atlanta, where he set himself up in business.

But he did not prosper. He and his wife lived rapidly and spent lavishly, despite of applying himself to business. It is said, he devoted himself to pleasure. He was obliged to keep drawing on his wife's resources, until at last, it is asserted, he was about to go to Philadelphia to mortgage their joint property, their only remaining asset, when he was shot.

In a letter to his wife, shortly before their marriage, Grace made this confession: "I have been a rich failure and can truthfully say it was ruined by women."

Also in another letter to his wife he wrote: "What I have witnessed (and I say this absolutely free of sentimental feeling) has been a revelation to me, in that it shows the depths of such fast living to be deeply. I shall never again be enticed by the sweet silver tongue of woman into the depths of depravity. Neither shall I again drink whiskey."

Just Thought He Would Die.

From the time Grace was found in his room, wounded and alone, it was never thought until recently that he had any chance whatever to live. At first his entire body was paralyzed. But he gradually gained control of the upper part of his body, and now only the lower portion is useless. Even this, his physicians believe, will be finally overcome.

He has made several post-mortem statements at times when it was thought he was dying, and in each one he has sworn to his conviction that his wife first drugged and then shot him—for the sole purpose of getting his insurance money. That he has always loved his wife, he does not deny, although he claims to be indifferent to her fate now. In the beginning his people stood by Mrs. Grace, even going so far as to assert that Grace was not in his right mind, but the latter's repeated statements and the knowledge of other and mysterious circumstances that soon be revealed of the trial have thrown them all against her.

In declaring her innocence Mrs. Grace affirms that she has always loved her husband, and now loves him, and that to accuse her of attempting to kill him is a monstrous injustice.

CONSIDER LINEHAN PARDON WEDNESDAY

Friends Feel Sure of Favorable Action; His Family Suffering.

Ex-Senator Frank J. Linehan's petition for a pardon is to go before the Executive Council on Wednesday and the former politician's friends feel confident that it will be acted upon favorably.

Linehan is serving a two-years' sentence at Deer Island on a charge of defrauding the city on a bunker deal. He was a fugitive for a long time, but finally surrendered at New Orleans and pleaded guilty to an indictment which had been found against him by the Suffolk County Grand Jury.

His family has suffered keenly by his predicament. He left a wife and six children behind when he departed for the House of Correction, and as he was the only support his family has been almost destitute at times.

The pardon is sought because of his family and because, it is urged, the ends of justice have been satisfied by the confinement which Linehan has already suffered.

The case would have been considered at the last meeting of the Executive Council, but, through an error, no court record of the case was available.

The Countess' two children are here, and Mrs. Vanderbilt spends a large part of her time with them.

CAPTAIN LATIMER MAY SUE INSPECTOR

Militia Officer Acquitted of Assault Charge Says Counsel Has Case.

Captain George T. Latimer of Company H, Fifth Infantry, M. V. M., who was acquitted of a charge of assault upon Police Inspector Henry M. Pierce, has consulted counsel with the intention of bringing suit against Inspector Pierce. He said:

"That matter is now in the hands of my counsel. I will probably hold several consultations with them during next week and expect to decide whether to continue the fight.

"I am satisfied with Judge Sullivan's verdict. It was as much as the lower courts could do for me. Beyond this I decline to say anything more."

Captain Latimer was acquitted of the charge of assault upon Inspector Pierce when the inspector placed him under arrest on Bunker Hill street, Charlestown, the night of July 12. The inspector, in his testimony, admitted using his blackjack upon Captain Latimer.

Mr. Storer of Captain Latimer's counsel, is Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Regiment. Mr. Sweetser is Colonel of the Eighth Regiment.

SAUGUS BOILING AGAIN.

Question of Fire Warden Stirs Up the Town This Time.

It's always one thing after another in Saugus politics and the latest is the next forest fire warden. Who shall it be? Ole Christiansen has resigned the job. The Selectmen will elect a successor at their next meeting.

Friends of Fire Chief Clayton W. Rees say he should get the place. They argue that the duties of a forest fire warden fall naturally in line with those of a fire chief.

On the other hand, friends of Tree Warden Thomas H. Berrett declare that a tree warden should also be a forest fire warden. They point out that trees are as close to a forest fire warden's job as fires are, that there must be trees for a forest fire in the first place. Hence the logical candidate of the tree warden.

It is considered a very delicate argument, as it stands.

VICTIMS MAY BE FORTY.

Reports of Disaster by Cloudburst Coming in.

RENO, Nev., July 20.—Reports today from the scene of the cloudburst at Masuma and Seven Troughs state that the death list will number forty or more. More than a score of bodies have been recovered. Wire communication with the devastated district is slowly being restored and details of the disaster are being learned. At Masuma a solid wall of water fifteen feet high swept through the narrow canyon in which the town is situated, carrying everything, business houses, mills and residences, before it.

Wounded While Hunting.

BROCKTON, July 20.—George Parker, janitor of the Home Bank and Bixby buildings on Main street, died today for Blue Hill, Me., on account of a gunshot injury to his son, Stephen, who was shot in the knee by the accidental discharge of a rifle while hunting.

14 HORSES PERISH IN SOUTH END FIRE

Investigating Blaze Which Wrecked Northampton Street Stable.

Fourteen horses were burned to death and damage estimated at $7,000 was caused by a fire which wrecked the livery stable at No. 75 Northampton street, South End, yesterday.

The cause of the fire is a mystery, and an investigation will probably be made.

Occupants of several adjoining tenement houses fled to the street, some taking their valuables with them. The wind threatened to spread the fire to adjoining dwellings, and a second alarm was sounded.

SHOCKS IN MEXICO SCARE THOUSANDS

No Loss of Life, but Many Houses Are Destroyed by Earthquake.

MEXICO CITY, July 20.—An earthquake at Guadalajara has done heavy damage there, according to advices received here today. The quake shook down a number of buildings, and the street in the centre of the city is filled with debris. No loss of life has been reported, but hundreds are said to have been made homeless. In all twenty-four shocks were felt, extending through twelve hours. The city has been thrown into a panic and thousands are fleeing. Trains leaving the city are crowded with refugees.

TWO MYSTERIOUSLY KILLED BY FUMES

Firemen Succumb After Fighting Flames in a Celluloid Factory.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 20.—Two firemen are dead and five others ill as a result of being overcome by poisonous celluloid fumes while fighting a slight fire in the Callender block last Thursday night. Peculiarly enough, the men did not seem to feel the effects at first, but went to their homes, apparently all right, after being revived. Then later they became sick and Hoseman Edward J. L. Hogan and Fred McCaffrey of Hose Company No. 1 died at the Rhode Island Hospital.

Captain James W. Curtis, Hoseman George B. Borden, Hoseman Alexander M. McKay and Laddermen William J. Moylan and John J. Deary of Hook and Ladder No. 1 are still ill, but will recover.

Building House of Philippine Woods

W. Cameron Forbes Using Rare Timber in His Residence at Westwood.

W. Cameron Forbes, Governor General of the Philippines, homes for a six months' vacation, will have a house some day on his estate at Westwood, the interior finish of which will be of Philippine woods. Each of the timber is difficult to get in the market and some of it impossible.

One shipment the Governor-General is gathering has arrived at Westwood. It is of the same general commercial nature as wood now in the American or Philippine market, but in sawing, grain and other qualities far surpasses the ordinary product of the timber market. Some of the timber is mahogany. Much of it, however, is of timber which the Spanish residents of mestas in the Philippines use in their dwellings, but which is not on the market because of its scarcity.

"The liberal newspapers printed only true facts about the alleged cruelties of Italian soldiers, and helped allay the false and malicious rumors spread about concerning the cruel treatment of Turkish prisoners."

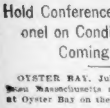
NEW ENGLAND MEN VISIT ROOSEVELT

Hold Conference with the Colonel on Conditions for the Coming Battle.

OYSTER BAY, July 20.—A delegation from Massachusetts and Vermont arrived at Oyster Bay on the noon train to confer with Colonel Roosevelt over the coming fight in New England.



The Colonel today began work upon the speech which he will deliver Aug. 1 or 5 before the Progressive convention in Chicago. In this he will set forth his views on the campaign issues, one of the chief features being a discussion of the high cost of living problem.

The Democratic platform put the country for the high cost of living upon the tariff," said the colonel today. "I doubt if the tariff is as much responsible as the Democrats think. If all the tariff were moved, I am inclined to believe that the cost of living would not be lowered 10 per cent. It is something that has to be worked out. The trusts unquestionably enter into the cost of living problem.

"The aim of the progressives will be to find some solution of this question which is a vital one to every man in the country."

Comptroller Prendergast of New York, is billed to make the speech in the third party convention putting Colonel Roosevelt in nomination for the presidency. Judge Ben Lindsey, of Denver, a Democrat, will second the nomination. Lindsay is also spoken of as the colonel's running mate. Roosevelt has a deep admiration for Lindsay and his selection as seconder of the nomination has his approval. The colonel likes the idea, too, of Lindsay being the vice-presidential nominee.

Herbert Knox Smith, who resigned his place as commissioner of corporations under President Taft, called today to talk to the colonel about corporation control. Smith will take the stump for the colonel this Fall.

CATLIN CHARGES FRAUD IN VOTE TO VACATE HIS SEAT

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Congressman Theron T. Catlin of Missouri characterized as a "monumental fraud" the action of the House Committee on Elections in voting to recommend that he be deprived of his seat in the House.

The committee decided, by a vote of 6 to 2, to report that Mr. Catlin had not been properly elected, because it was disclosed that his relatives had spent approximately $12,000 in his campaign, contrary to the State law.

"The action of the Democratic members of the Committee on Elections in declaring that Patrick Gill be entitled to my seat violates every principle of political decency and is a travesty on elementary justice," said Representative Catlin.

His engagement to Laura Beatrice Merriam, daughter of ex-Governor W. R. Merriam of Minnesota, was announced this week.

HOUSE DEMOCRATS PAY WILSON A VISIT

120 Congressmen Go to Sea Girt and Pledge Support to Democratic Nominee.

SEA GIRT, N. J., July 20.—One hundred and twenty enthusiastic Democratic members of the House of Representatives, headed by Speaker Champ Clark, today made a pilgrimage to Sea Girt, paid their respects to Governor Wilson and pledged themselves to fight for Democratic victory under his leadership.

The party left Washington at 8 a. m. on a special train and arrived at the New Jersey Summer capital at 1 p. m. Behind Speaker Clark they marched to the Governor's house, where, in company with Mrs. Wilson and their daughters and a dozen of his advisers, the nominee received the party.

The greeting between the two rivals for the Democratic nomination was most cordial, and as they clasped hands the assembled Democrats cheered loudly. Speaker Clark made a little speech in which he told the Governor, whom he referred to as the next President of the United States, that those Presidents who had been most successful in office had been those who knew the members of the legislative branch of the government and understood their purposes.

The Speaker promised Governor Wilson with an album containing the names of every Democratic member of the House.

Governor Wilson made a happy response in which he expressed the hope for more intimate acquaintance and association with his visitors, and pointed out that their purpose as well as his was to make living conditions easier for the people and that to do this they must understand each other and work in harmony.

The Governor declared his great appreciation of the honor the Democratic legislators had done him in coming to Sea Girt after which the visitors formed in line and were individually introduced.

DENY CONTRACTORS PAID DELEGATES' WAY TO BALTIMORE

That certain contractors paid the expenses of some of the Massachusetts delegation to the Democratic National convention at Baltimore is a rumor that the Finance Commission has been investigating for several days, according to gossip in political circles.

The story which has been given wide circulation and has evidently reached the ears of the investigating body, credits a number of contractors with making contributions to the campaign expenses of the party and cites two two contractors having been generous enough to produce $500 each.

Mayor Fitzgerald and every member of the Finance Commission denies emphatically the story as a joke. The Mayor said that if any such collection or contribution was made, it was done without his knowledge, and speaking for the Boston members of the party, he stated they personally defrayed his own expenses. He considers the story was started as a joke and has been magnified by repetition until it is apparently believed.

Those who were among the delegation were amused at the rumor and declared that if any fund was raised it must have been noticeably small for the shortage of funds was apparent after the convention had lasted ten days instead of five which it was figured would end the deliberations.

SAM WINSLOW TOSSES A CONGRESSIONAL HAT IN 4TH DISTRICT RING

WORCESTER, July 20.—Colonel Samuel E. Winslow, millionaire president of the Winslow Skate Manufacturing Company, and former Harvard lacrosse player, today added his caster into the arena at the annual outing of the Worcester City Republican Committee Club, held at Edgemere, when he announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination as Congressman from the Fourth District.

A. P. Langtry, Secretary of State; James M. Swift, Attorney-General, and Joseph H. Walker, a Republican candidate for Governor, just boiled on and listened. Hon. Wilfred Shuster of the Governor's Council was also present. It is a matter of gossip that Shuster won a thirst.

About 400 left City Hall by special car for Thule Island, where they embarked on a boat for Edgemere, on the shores of Lake Quinsigamond. A clambake was awaiting them. After this had been disposed of they watched a ball game between the City Committee and the County Committee, which was won by the former.

AFTER CIVIL SERVICE MEN.

Gen. Black to Move Against Active Politicians.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—General John C. Black, head of the United States Civil Service Commission, announced today as soon as Congress provides the funds he will begin an active investigation of charges of improper political activities, made against some seventy employes of the government, who come under the civil service regulations. These men, whose alleged offences are to be investigated, are all in the Southern States and the charges arise largely out of the part they are said to have taken in the Taft-Roosevelt pre-convention scrumble for delegates.

GOVERNORS ON TOUR.

Past and Present Executives Meet at Bretton Woods.

Governors, past and present, were among a notable group of arrivals within the past few days at Bretton Woods, N. H. They were all traveling by automobile. In the party were John L. Bates, former Governor of New Hampshire, and his family; Governor Robert P. Bass, and former Governors Frank W. Rollins and Henry B. Quimby of New Hampshire, and former Governor Hollis S. Woodruf of Connecticut. They all reported the trip a delightful one.

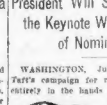
TAFT'S CAMPAIGN IN HANDS OF ADVISERS

President Will Simply Deliver the Keynote When Notified of Nomination.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—President Taft's campaign for re-election will rest entirely in the hands of his political advisers, Mr. Taft taking little if any, personal part in the working out of the plans for the continuance of his official life.



That is what the Chief Executive told a number of callers at the White House today who inquired what steps he was pursuing to take with reference to the coming struggle. Chairman Hilles, with the advisory committee of the Republican National Committee, will have full charge of the campaign, and the President will take the preceding practically as an outsider. He will not even suggest the names of the advisory committee nor will he advocate any one for the post of treasurer of the National Committee. He will deliver the keynote of the campaign when notified August 1 that he has been nominated for the Presidency and then will content himself with a few addresses in the larger cities near Hilles.

The National Republican Executive Committee, as announced late today, will consist of the following members:

With headquarters in New York city and in charge of campaign in Eastern States—Charles F. Brooks of Augusta, Me.; Fred W. Katzenbock of Nashua, N. H.; James F. Goodrich of Indianapolis, Ind.; Alvah H. Martin of Norfolk, Va., and Newell Sanders of Chattanooga, Tenn.

With headquarters in Chicago and in charge of campaign in Middle Western States—John F. Adams of Dubuque, Ia.; H. H. Metringhaus of St. Louis, Mo.; Alfred T. Rogers of Madison, Wis.; Roy O. West of Chicago, and Charles D. Warren of Detroit.

With headquarters in San Francisco and in charge of campaign in Western States—S. A. Perkins of Tacoma, Wash., and Ralph Williams of Dallas, Oregon.

All of these men are members of the National Committee and will take an active part in the conduct of the campaign until election day.

TAFT MANAGERS HAVE DIFFICULTY IN FINDING TREASURER

NEW YORK, July 20.—The Taft campaign managers are up against a hard and fast stumbling block in their selection of a campaign treasurer. The post has been tendered to several men so far, all of whom have declined on the ground that they could not spare the time that the arduous duties would exact.

This condition is said to be the "chief trouble" said James B. Reynolds, secretary of the Republican National Committee, at headquarters today. All of the men who had settled on insisted that their private affairs could not spare the time the treasurership would need. The appointment of advisory and executive committees is also under advisement and selections probably will not be made before the sub-committee of the National committee meets on Monday."

CHARLES DIDN'T CALL.

Taft's Brother Motored Right by Wilson Home.

SEA GIRT, N. J., July 20.—Charles P. Taft, a brother of the President, passed Governor Wilson's cottage in an automobile, saluted the flag on the ride range in front of the cottage, but did not stop. Mr. Taft took dinner at a Sea Girt hotel not far from the Governor's residence.

MISS ISABEL D. MARTIN OF HYDE PARK, WHO IS TO WED E. I. HANSCOM

MISS ISABEL MARTIN

The engagement of Miss Isabel D. Martin, one of the prettiest girls of Hyde Park, to Elmer I. Hanscom of this city and Milo, Me., has been announced by the girl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Martin of No. 7 Boston street, Hyde Park.

Miss Martin is an accomplished musician. It was when playing at a Boston hotel she met Mr. Hanscom.

O'CONNELL ENTERS 3D DISTRICT RACE

FITCHBURG, July 20.—A lively fight for the Democratic nomination for Congressman will be waged in the Third District between Representative Frank H. Pope of Leominster and former Mayor M. Fred O'Connell of Fitchburg.

Representative Pope announced his candidacy several weeks ago. He said today that when he did so he understood that he would be unopposed for the nomination.

"I understood that I was to receive no opposition from Fitchburg in my candidacy for the nomination," said Mr. Pope today. "The announcement that Mr. O'Connell is seriously considering entering the field surprises me."

Ex-Mayor O'Connell said: "Friends from different parts of the district have urged me to be a candidate for Congress this year. I had not considered being a candidate until many of my friends had urged me to do so. I am frank to confess that I should like to go to Congress, and especially when I believe there is such an opportunity to perform public service. The high cost of living, to my mind, is the issue of the campaign."

REPUBLICANS SEEK OPPONENT TO QUINN

Certain City Machine Members Opposed to Supporting the Sheriff.

Strong opposition among certain members of the Republican city machine has developed over the fact that Sheriff John Quinn has been promised the support of the Republican city committee in his fight for re-election.

Sheriff Quinn has taken out papers for the Republican nomination, and has been assured by certain Republican leaders that the city organization of the part, would be with him in the fight.

Those who oppose this program have been casting about for several days in an endeavor to land a candidate to oppose Quinn for the Republican nomination. Street Commissioner James A. Gallivan was approached and urged to enter the fight for the Republican nomination, but he would not give a definite answer to those who are opposing the sheriff.

"Picturesque" Robinson, of Ward 16, is thus far the only avowed candidate against the sheriff for the Republican nomination. Those who are advocating a candidate against the sheriff, base their desire for a contest on the argument that it would be poor politics for the Republican machine to let the best county office in Suffolk pass without making some sort of a fight.

Street Commissioner Gallivan at his home in Hull yesterday said: "I have been asked by many of my friends to go into the fight. Some of those friends have been Republicans and others have been Democrats. I have not given a decisive answer yet because I am still considering the matter."

Asked if he had been approached by a number of Republican ward chairmen, who are members of the city committee, and tendered offers of support in the event of his making a fight, the street commissioner replied that he did not care to discuss the matter.

William McDonald, a constable, who opposed the late Sheriff Seavey for the Democratic nomination several years ago, is again a candidate for the honor.

Name Presented to Taft for Judgeship Appointment.

The name of Robert L. Raymond, a Boston attorney, has been presented to President Taft for appointment to the United States District Court of Massachusetts to fill the vacancy caused by the advancement of Judge Frederick Dodge to the Circuit Judgeship. It is expected that the appointment of Judge Dodge will be confirmed the first of the week, and simultaneously the name of his successor will be submitted to Congress.

MANY IN FIELD TO SUCCEED M'CALL

Republicans of All Brands, Regulars and B. M., Making a Lively Campaign.

When Samuel W. McCall decided to drift his congressional headgear he bees immediately got busy buzzing in a number of other bonnets. Some were plain and unadorned G. O. P. bees, some were marked B. M. (Bull Moose), and others, just as kept and active, were Democratic.

For twenty years no man has dreamed of going to Congress in the Eighth Massachusetts bailiwick in opposition to McCall. Hence the buzzing.

Here are some aspirants:

Senator Charles H. Brown of Medford, Roosevelt supporter.

Henry C. Long of Cambridge, Republican progressive.

Former Senator F. W. Dallinger of Cambridge, G. O. P. regular.

Former Representative Charles H. Adams of Melrose, G. O. P. regular.

Frederick S. Dietrick of Cambridge, Democrat.

Mayor J. Edward Barry of Cambridge, Democrat.

Former Mayor Charles J. Barton of Melrose, Democrat.

Charles A. Dean of Wakefield, Democrat.

Mr. Dietrick has already started his campaign. He says that McCall is a rank reactionary and that the people of the district want a progressive. He says he stands by the Baltimore platform and declares that a law should be passed to limit the length of service of Congressman, Senator and President.

O'SULLIVAN IS OUT FOR CONGRESS IN THE 5TH DISTRICT

LOWELL, July 21.—Humphrey O'Sullivan is a candidate for Congressman from the Fifth District to succeed Colonel Butler Ames, who has announced his retirement. Colonel Ames has served five terms. In carving out the new district lines, Congressman Ames succeeded in having the "Eighth Fifth" District, as it has been termed, made safely Republican. Lawrence, with its Democratic majority of 2,000, was taken from the district and placed with Lynn. Small towns were included to make the Lowell district supposedly solid for any Republican.

The advent of O'Sullivan into the contest makes the district doubtful. O'Sullivan, prosperous in his business, an active and energetic Democrat, and with the backing of many Republican personal friends, is a powerful bet. He will make his fight in the Fifth District for any Republican. Colonel James H. Carmichael of Lowell, ex-Mayor Joseph A. Casey, and J. W. Grimes of Reading, are among other candidates mentioned for the nomination. Former Speaker John N. Cole of Andover leads in the race for the Republican nomination.

Lorimer Ousted by Committee.

July 20.—William Lorimer has just gone through another unseating, this time as a member of the Republican County Central Committee.

BRYAN'S 1908 FUND WAS OVER $600,000

Treasurer Herman Ridder Gives Figures to Congressional Investigating Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—By contributing $10,000 himself, and permitting each of his three sons to contribute $5,000, Herman Ridder, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee of 1908, evaded the Bryan dictum against contributions of more than $10,000.

Ridder today appeared before the Senate sub-committee investigating campaign expenses. He produced detailed records of the 1908 campaign not only for New York State as required by law, but for the entire United States, showing the war chest that year contained $620,644.72. Before the campaign was over $619,410.05 was spent.

"Was any money received by your committee which is not in these accounts?" Mr. Ridder was asked.

"No money passed through my hands not included in the record."

"Do you recall any contributions made by August Belmont or by Thomas F. Ryan?"

"No, neither made contributions unless he did so under cover of some other subscription, and I don't think that's true because the subscriptions were too small."

"Do you know whether any of the contributors made contributions on behalf of any interest?"

"No, but I am sure they did not."

Ridder declared that he had nothing to do with the financial end of the 1904 national campaign nor with the Congressional campaigns of 1906 and 1910.

To Avoid Pasty, Shiny, Streaked Complexions

(From Beauty's Mirror.)

Those who abhor sickly, greasy, shiny, streaked complexions should religiously avoid creams, powders and rouges these heated days. There's no need for them, anyway, since the virtues of mercolized wax have become known. No amount of perspiration will produce any evidence that you've been using the wax. As it is applied at bedtime and washed off in the morning, the complexion never looks like a make-up. Mercolized wax gradually takes off a bad complexion, instead of adding anything to make it worse. It has none of the disadvantages of cosmetics and accomplishes much more in keeping the complexion beautifully white, satiny and youthful. Just get an ounce of it at your druggist's and see what a few days' treatment will do. Use like cold cream.

Another effective Summer treatment—heat tending to cause wrinkles and flabbiness—is a skin-tightener made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. It's use (as a face bath) leaves no trace.

DAKOTA DAN'S OWN STORY OF HIS LIFE

'BURY ME IN MELROSE,' SAID DAKOTA DAN WHEN DOCTORS TOLD HIM HE COULDN'T LIVE

"I Wrote to My Brother; I Got No Answer," Says Russell Claimant, Describing Sojourn in Hospital How He Came Home and Strove to See Man He Declares Is Relative

THE second instalment of Dakota Dan's life story is printed in today's Sunday AMERICAN. The remarkable battle that is being waged by two men each of whom swears he is Dan Blake Russell, and entitled to half of the half million dollar estate left by the late Daniel Russell of Melrose, has attracted widespread attention.

It is one of the most novel and mystifying will fights that the country ever saw. Before Master Percy in the East Cambridge courthouse tomorrow Dan's second fight for what he calls his rightful inheritance will be continued.

In the opening chapter of his life story, told in yesterday's AMERICAN, Dakota Dan said that he left his home in Melrose twenty-seven years ago because his father would not buy him a new suit of clothing. He and his father quarrelled. Dan's mother, he said, gave him help.

"You will soon be back home," Dan said his father remarked.

"When I come back home you will be dead," Dan said he replied.

Dan fell in with a fellow named Smith. They "beat" their way to Providence where Dan had relatives. He could not find them. From that point Dakota Dan takes up his story in today's instalment which follows.

By DAKOTA DAN.

Dakota Dan, original claimant of Russell fortune, showing various attitudes and expressions.

CHAPTER II

BOB told me he had a sister in Malone, N. Y. [illegible] had a little money. [illegible] keep that to buy grub and beat our way on the trains.

Bob took the [illegible] and showed me how to [illegible]. He took good care of me and we beat our way to Malone, N. Y.

This was my first experience, I might say, as a hobo. It was something new to me.

We were probably two weeks in making the trip to Malone, as we stopped off at various places along the route and weren't in any particular hurry anyhow.

Bob found his sister in Malone, and we stayed with them.

Bob, by the way, went by the name of "Smith," but his real name was Robert Twist. He is now running a harness shop in Norwood, N. Y.

Beat His Way West.

After staying around Malone for about a month, we took a train one night and went to Ogdensburg, N. Y. We then beat our way to St. Paul, Minn., stopping off at La Crosse on the way. We then went to Barnesville.

It was at this place I lost Bob. Bob and I started to catch a train. That train was going pretty fast. Bob was somewhat of an expert on getting on trains and succeeded in climbing aboard. I missed it. That was the last time I saw Bob Smith or, as his real name is, Bob Twist, until my trial two years ago, when I succeeded in finding him in Norwood, N. Y., where he is running a harness shop, and brought him to East Cambridge.

Later I made a train at Barnesville and returned to St. Paul.

I met several lumberjacks at St. Paul. They were talking about going into the woods to work. I thought that would be a good chance for me. The lumberjacks became interested in me. They called me "The Kid." I was younger than most of them and probably looked green to them. That may have been the reason why they referred to me as "The Kid."

They took me into their company. We beat our way to Manistee, Mich. Here I hired out to N. G. Peters and went up into camp as a flunkey. In this section of the country they would probably call a flunkey a "cookee," which is a man who works around assisting the cook. This happened in the Fall of 188[illegible].

In Lumber Camp

I worked for Mr. Peters until 1887. I received $22 a month.

I crossed the river from Manistee to Cedar River, where I worked two months. I don't remember the name of that lumber camp. Later I worked as a helper in a blacksmith shop.

I then went to Marinette, Mich. I worked for the Casey Lumber Company until the latter part of October and then came East again to Malone, N. Y.

In the Spring of 1888 I reached Malone. From there I went to Cleveland, Ohio. I worked for about a week in Cleveland.

While in my boarding house in Cleveland one evening a fellow with whom I had just got acquainted came in and asked me if I had ever done anything wrong. I said:

"No. Not to my knowledge."

"Well," he said, "there is a man in this town looking for a fellow of your description."

I asked him to describe the man to me. The description he gave me fitted my uncle, Tom Lynde, my mother's brother.

So I said, "No, I have never done any wrong, but my folks are after me."

I went down to the depot, walked up the track a few rods and waited for a train. The train came along and I boarded it. I was making my way Westward. They put me off the train [illegible] but I finally [illegible]ed at Stillwater, Minn., and hired out to the St. Croix Lumber Company.

I worked for this company for about six months. [illegible] Spring of 1891 I went to [illegible]. I paid my way to [illegible]. This was not the first time, however, that I paid my way. Very frequently it was impossible to travel [illegible] you did pay your way.

I [illegible] in Chicago on a boat and went to Buffalo, going down the Erie Canal and walking over to Buffalo, a distance of about three miles. From Buffalo I again went to Malone, N. Y.

I afterwards went to Montreal, Canada. A [illegible] I shipped on a horse boat and went over to Liverpool. In the Fall of 1891 I returned to Montreal and went from there to [illegible] Minneapolis, Minn.

From Minneapolis I went to Stillwater and hired [illegible] Lumber Company.

In the Spring of 1892 I went up to Snake River carrying luncheon for the river drivers. By river driver I mean a man who drives logs in the river. They are called "river pigs" out there.

I carried luncheon for them about a month. Then I quit, as it was very unsatisfactory work.

I came down from up the river intending to go to Minneapolis. Before I got to Minneapolis, I came to a town where Lemen Brothers Show was stopping. I stopped and hired out with the show as prop man.

I quit this show in Rhinelander, Wis. Before this at one time I had been with Robinson's Show for about a week. I did the same kind of work. That was the reason I took the job with the Lemen Brothers Show.

I left Rhinelander and went to Warner. At Warner I went to work in the woods for a man named Robert Corbett. I worked for him until the Spring of 1893.

Went to World's Fair.

I went to Chicago to the World's Fair. I stayed in Chicago for perhaps two months.

I went out of Chicago with a show and my recollection now is that it was a small show. I left that show and joined Ringling's. With this show I worked as a helper to Fred Turner, horseshoer. I remained with Ringling's all Summer, and made a tour way down East. In the Fall I returned to Baraboo, Wis., which was the headquarters of Ringling's show. I stayed that Winter with the show around its headquarters.

In the Spring of 1894 I started to go West. I went to Alma, Wis., where I worked for a Mr. Lane in a lumber mill. I drove a team. I worked for him until the last day of June when a man was drowned in the river. This man worked at the electric light plant owned by Mr. Courts. Mr. Lane and Mr. Courts were old friends. As Mr. Courts was unable to get the right kind of a man to take the dead man's place, he asked Mr. Lane if I might work for him until his son returned home. Mr. Courts said he would be only too glad to let me work for him, if I felt so disposed myself.

I went to work for Mr. Courts and fired the boiler in the electric light plant. I worked for him until some time in September, when his son returned.

CHAPTER III.

THEN I went to Grand Rapids, Wis. I stopped there at a boarding house run by a Mr. Benderlin. I went to work with a man by the name of Larson, a millwright, as a helper.

On the twelfth day of December, 1894, Mr. Benderlin died. I had intended to go back into the woods in the Fall but Mrs. Benderlin wanted me to stay and take charge of the boarding house, which I did.

In the Spring of 1895, I went to work with Louis Larsen in a blacksmith shop.

At my former trial I had as a witness the man who built this blacksmith shop while I was there and in which I went to work with Mr. Larsen.

Mr. Larsen got married on the 5th day of August, 1895, and I went to board with him. I worked with him that Fall and then left for Grand Rapids, and from there went to Menominee, Mich. I intended at this time to go home.

I went to work for the [illegible] Lumber Company and worked there until about the 1st of January, 1896. I was taken ill with a heavy cold and went to the Marine Hospital in Milwaukee.

I remained in the hospital until June, 1896, as near as I can remember. I went to Beloit, Wis., where I visited with some old friends connected with Ringling's show. I stayed there two or three days.

My next stop was Sycamore, and the next was Ida Grove, Wis.

Here a man named John Starts was preparing to do threshing. He had two sons, Frank and John. They had two threshing machines and I made a bargain to help them. While there I wrote to friends in Wabasha, Minn.

Meets Kate Swirtz.

In Wabasha I [illegible] with [illegible] about building a blacksmith shop. I had told him that as soon as it was completed I would come to work for him as his assistant or apprentice and learn the blacksmith business.

I told Mr. Starts that I was waiting to hear from Grass. While working for Mr. Starts, I heard that the shop had been completed and wrote to Mr. Grass telling him I would be on at once.

I went to Ida Grove and bought a ticket to St. Paul. When I got on the train I found that my ticket read from Ida Grove to Sioux City and from Sioux City to Sioux City, instead of St. Paul. The ticket seller had written the wrong name in on the ticket.

The conductor said he couldn't carry me any farther than Sioux City. He said he would wire back. He wired back. At Sioux City he had got no answer. I waited over for one train for the answer. The answer came and my ticket was corrected so that I was able to go to St. Paul. I bought a ticket to Wabasha, which is ninety miles east of St. Paul.

At Wabasha I went to work for Mr. Grass. While I was working with Mr. Grass I renewed my acquaintance with Miss Kate Swirtz, whom I had met at different times while I worked on the river in Minnesota.

Miss Swirtz is the daughter of Valentine Swirtz, who was a resident of Wabasha. Mr. Swirtz was in the hardware and farming business.

I worked for Vincent Grass up to the time of my marriage, on November [illegible], 189[illegible]. I married Miss Swirtz.

Two weeks after my marriage I left Grass and went into business for myself. I rented a shop and put out a sign as a blacksmith. I rented the shop from Tom Simon and George Boody, who were in business together under the firm name of Simon & Boody. They were general contractors.

They wanted a man in their shop anyhow, and they let me have the use of the shop and all machinery necessary to carry on the business. [illegible] I got [illegible] a first class horseshoer. [illegible] work for many of the farmers around that neighborhood and in town. I had the best trade in the horseshoeing business in that section of the country.

I might say, incidentally, that Mr. Boody will be in East Cambridge if he is needed, and will corroborate what I have said in connection with him.

I remained in this shop until the Fall of 189[illegible]. At that time my reputation as [illegible] had spread considerably and [illegible] a letter from Hiram Bens[illegible] a livery stable [illegible] and went to [illegible] McD[illegible] [illegible]

In [illegible] 1898, I returned to Wabasha [illegible] half an interest in a [illegible] Pete Munroe.

I worked with Munroe until harvesting time. Help was scarce at that time and [illegible] father in law's grain was going to [illegible] if it was not harvested. I suggested that as business was rather slack that I help my father-in-law harvest his crop. Pete Munroe [illegible] quarrelled and I told [illegible] with me for my share [illegible]

I went to work for the Jones Oil Company in the Summer of 1899. That company bought a ranch in North Dakota in 1900. They wanted a man to go out there and manage the ranch. So in the Spring of 1900 I went to Dickinson, N. D., with three carloads of cattle and established on the ranch.

That Fall I went with the H-T outfit. I shoed horses. While I was working for the H T a Mr. Bowlin bought seventy-two head of horses. Mr. Bowlin worked in a camp with me at one time. He wanted me to go with him and shoe his horses. Mr. Clarke, head of the outfit, said that he was willing I should go if I wanted to. Mr. Bowlin said he would give me [illegible] pay my wife's board a [illegible]. Mr. Clarke said that it was all right to go ahead. He said:

Works as Cattleman.

I went to Minneapolis and then [illegible] to Dickinson. Mr. White [illegible] charge of the Bel[illegible] was in the Spring [illegible]

[illegible] Cannon [illegible]

CHAPTER IV.

McDaniels and Barry had shipped about 35,000 head of sheep out to North Dakota. They were looking for locations to place the sheep. After I built my shack on the ranch I thought I wanted something to range on it.

I told McDaniels and Barry I could put a band of sheep on my ranch. I succeeded in placing the sheep and also went in business for myself. I was in entire charge of all these sheep.

That Summer I cleared up about $7,000.

This was my first real start since I left [illegible].

The wool [illegible] these sheep was shipped to [illegible] and other points in the East. Of this I am pretty sure.

On every [illegible] that I shipped our [illegible] which bore the name of McD[illegible] and Barry by Daniel B. Russel.

Of course, if that wool came to Boston it would be [illegible] for anybody to locate me by [illegible].

In the Spring of 1903 three men came to my ranch in North Dakota. They camped on the creek for three months. They said they were prospectors. I believe now that those three men were detectives sent from Boston to spy on me and find out what they could about me.

Then I went [illegible] and horses and remained [illegible] until the Fall of 190[illegible] by a horse. I was [illegible] the hospital at D[illegible] [illegible]

The hospital [illegible] told me that I hadn't [illegible] that if I had any business [illegible] better [illegible] I had to Mrs. R[illegible] my body to Melrose and they [illegible] [illegible] Masonic [illegible] plenty of [illegible] and that [illegible] Russell.

Wrote to Melrose

[illegible] I told [illegible] recover, [illegible] brother, [illegible] I got [illegible]

[illegible] that [illegible] probably [illegible] I had [illegible]

So I went down and stopped at the St. Charles Hotel in Dickinson. I told Will Rae and some of the other boys about it. I was looking for somebody to take charge of my ranch so I could come down here.

At this time a man by the name [illegible] Minneapolis, an [illegible] and iron company [illegible] and introduced himself. [illegible] told me that he had [illegible] been left a large [illegible] said that he had a good [illegible] road-digging machine [illegible] I wasn't prepared [illegible] investments.

[illegible] if I came to Minneapolis [illegible] me through to Boston.

I went to Minneapolis with him [illegible] Boston to get a copy of [illegible] I got a copy of the [illegible] saying that I had [illegible] here. That was early [illegible]

[illegible] receiving that letter I concluded to [illegible] down and see about it.

Meets Sarah Aimy.

Knowing that my brother was not a very keen business man, I thought that it would be better for me to look out for matters myself.

By that time I had somewhat recovered from my injuries.

Mr. Wattman took the letters and [illegible] me I had better [illegible] attorney and come to Boston [illegible] attorney and be [illegible]. I paid him some. He [illegible] Fetzer.

We [illegible] from Minneapolis together. I went up to our house in Melrose. Sarah Aimy opened the door.

"Is Mr. Russell home?" I asked.

"No," she said, "he's in Boston."

"Is he over in our office?" said I, referring to the old fertilizer company office.

"I don't know where he is," she replied. Then she shut the door in my face. That was all the conversation I had with her.

[illegible] I went over to East Cambridge and found out that Barry and [illegible] were the lawyers, and that my brother and Aimy were the executors.

They kept fooling me. I wanted to [illegible] but for a long time [illegible].

CHAPTER V.

As a result of the conditions I found here when I came home, it became necessary for me to begin the fight for my inheritance. That fight lasted more than six months. Judge Lawton decided that I hadn't proven that I was Daniel Blake Russell—that I hadn't proof enough.

Then I appealed the case and it was postponed and postponed from one time to another until it finally reached its present stage, where it is being heard before a master in the East Cambridge court.

I have been in Melrose and in Boston most of the time since I came here in April, 1909.

I have spent all my earnings in the West which amounted to $25,000 at least in this [illegible] for my birthright. But I have never yet thought of giving up the fight and never will [illegible] I live.

I want to take this opportunity to thank the men and women of Melrose and Boston for the way in which they have stood by me in this fight for my rights.

I feel absolutely certain in my heart that when this fight is over that I will be able to show to the world that I have been absolutely right in my contention, and that these old boyhood friends of mine have been thoroughly justified in the stand they have taken for me.

THE END.

Dakota Dan Declares His Brother William Misled

I haven't a harsh word to say about my brother William. He is my own flesh and blood, and I wouldn't say a word against him if I felt that way, which I do not. The worst that I would possibly say in connection with my brother is that I am thoroughly convinced that he has been misled, and that in time he will recognize me as his brother, which I am.—From Dakota Dan's life story.

Special Lots at 33⅓% to 50% Below Usual Prices

In Addition The Automatic Bargain Basement Offers The Following Lots

Filene's Automatic Bargain Basement

Automatic Price Reductions A system—exclusive with the Automatic Bargain Basement—for making bargain prices on its lots. It works this way: if a lot does not sell out—in 12 days it is reduced 25%

in 18 days it is reduced 50%
in 24 days it is reduced 75%
in 30 days it is given away

In this way we keep lots moving out by moving prices down—making them greater bargains. We don't have to reduce prices—except when we start them too high, which we try not to do. We have every reason for making the first prices here extraordinarily low.

To illustrate what we mean take for example the lot of waists at 4.00, advertised below, which go on sale tomorrow, July 22. If this lot is not sold

by Aug. 5 it will be reduced 25% to $3
by Aug. 12 it will be reduced 50% to $2
by Aug. 19 it will be reduced 75% to $1
by Aug. 26 it will be given away.

To avoid the losses from reductions such as these we must make the first price extraordinarily low.

M'CALL LEADS G. O. P. FIELD FOR SENATORSHIP

The Progressives of New Hampshire would very much resent any advice from Massachusetts in their selection of a United States Senator.

I suppose you feel the same way down here.

Anyhow, I have no candidate for the United States Senate from Massachusetts.

It does seem to me that the retirement of a Stand Pat leader in the Senate gives the Progressives of Massachusetts—and by that I mean the PEOPLE of Massachusetts, for the people are ALL Progressives—an opportunity they should be quick to take advantage of.

There will be no advance in the way of restoring the government to the people if you replace one Stand Pat Senator with another Stand Pat Senator. Why not have one next time who really represents the beliefs of a majority of the Bay State voters of this generation?

Robert P. Bass.

CONGRESSMAN SAMUEL W. McCALL ... served in the lower house at Washington continuously ... a score of years, from the Eighth Massachusetts District, and ... has announced ... will not accept to be a candidate, ... ed yesterday that he was being urged ... to be a Republican candidate for the ... United States Senate to be ... Senator W. Murray Crane. ... Congressman McCall said that he had not ... made up his mind yet what he would do ... and that he would not decide until he had talked with his colleagues in Washington and has politics, friends in Massachusetts.

McCall's withdrawal as a Congressional candidate was quickly followed by the formal announcement from Russia that Ambassador Curtis Guild would not be a candidate to succeed Crane. A similar announcement came from Congressman Augustus P. Gardner of the Sixth Massachusetts District.

McCall Has Not Decided

The candidacy of Gardner, the son-in-law of Lodge, had assumed the same proportions as that of Guild and McCall.

Congressman McCall, at his home in Winchester, yesterday discussed the Senatorial matter.

"I didn't like to get ahead of my own mind in this thing," he said.

It was from the AMERICAN that the Eighth District Congressman first learned of the formal withdrawal of both Ambassador Guild and Congressman Gardner as candidates for the national Senate.

"It would be an honor that no one could refuse," said Congressman McCall, "to represent Massachusetts in the United States Senate.

"What you tell me of Ambassador Guild's declination to become a candidate is news to me, and so is the news that Congressman Gardner has declined also. I have been urged and am being urged to allow my name to be used as a candidate, but I have come to no decision in the matter. I will not, either, until I talk things over with my colleagues in Washington and Republicans here in Winchester.

Opposed by Progressives.

"No," considered Congressman McCall, "I'm not saying now that I'll be a candidate. I may have something to say in a few days.

Republicans in their several headquarters in clubs and hotel lobbies took upon the senatorial candidacy of Congressman McCall as assured and that he has been selected by the regular Republican organization to make the contest against any other comers.

Joseph Walker, unopposed for Governor; Robert Luce, unopposed for Lieutenant-Governor; Louis A. Frothingham, out of any kind of running for any office; and McCall for the Senate, succeeding Crane, is the Republican organization programme mapped out for nearly future political fighting in Massachusetts.

This programme is not to the liking of Republican Progressives. Congressman McCall is denounced by both Progressive whims of the Republican party as a reactionary.

The result of the November election and the wiping out of either the Progressives or the regular Republicans of Massachusetts may determine whether the candidacy of Congressman McCall for a Senate seat will be formally announced or not.

But his hat for the Senate is in the ring.

Falls from Staging.

Albert Steinberg, thirty, married, and living at No. 9 Moore street, Cambridge, while working on a new factory building on Fleet street, East Cambridge, yesterday afternoon, fell from a staging, a distance of twenty-five feet, sustaining injuries to the back and head. He was removed to the Cambridge Relief Hospital.

If everybody who would like to do honor to the memory of the heroes who went down with the Titanic should journey to Gloucester, on the occasion of this fete, I am afraid that splendid old city by the sea would find itself unable to take care of them.

But this, of course, will not be.

Many of those who feel the most, and might be anxious to do the most, cannot go to Mr. Hammond's.

All of us can be there in spirit.—ROBERT P. BASS.

"Angel of My Heart" Wrote Prince to Mary

Ardent Love Letters Won Heart of Miss Murphy, Chicago Telephone Girl.

CHICAGO, July 20.—The love letters of the Prince di Santa Margherita of Messina to Miss Mary Veronica Murphy, the Chicago "hello" girl, who was engagement to her royal suitor has just been announced, are just splendid, the young woman says. In the burning epistles the Prince addresses his adored one thus:

Marie, my adored One
My Dearest Mary
My Adored Mary
My dear Mary (Note small 'd' in dear—he used it after a lovers' spat)
My Dulcet Treasure, my life, my dear
My love, my life, my treasure.
Angel of my heart life of my life, beautiful ray of my loveliness down
Sweetness of my heart
My little Madonna my hope, my anchor,
Marie, my love, my wife.

They met at a ball in the La Salle Hotel last Spring. The Prince was instantly infatuated. He called the next day on Miss Murphy at her Wallace street residence. Then the Blues of the Princess, his mother, took him back to Sicily, and a series of interesting letters began which won the young woman's heart and hand.

LOAFERS MUST GO.

Cambridge to Rid Herself of Hoodlums and Hoboes.

Commissioner of Public Safety Henry J. Cunningham of Cambridge yesterday held a conference with the four police captains of the city with reference to ridding the park system of loafers, drunks, hoodlums and hoboes. Many complaints have been made of fights and of insults offered to women in the public parks, and Commissioner Cunningham wants the rules rigidly enforced.

PORTLAND, Me., July 20.—The Sandford yacht Barracouta, from bubonic plague infected West Indian ports, was held at quarantine and fumigated by order of Dr. Charles E. SPOT "LADY WITH THE GREEN PARASOL"

$100 Goes to the Person With the Sharpest Eyes at Revere Today.

Who will identify her today?

The man, woman or child who recognizes, as directed, "The Lady of the Green Parasol," at Revere Beach this afternoon will be just $100 richer by night. Looks easy, doesn't it?

It is easy for those who really SEE.

Most people fondly imagine that they see everything that is going on around them.

But do they? The AMERICAN maintains that the average American citizen really sees just about 10 per cent of the people and events that pass daily in front of their very eyes.

We will see who is right.

Turn to the picture in today's AMERICAN of "The Lady with the Green Parasol." Study it carefully. Impress her face and figure on your memory.

The same identical woman whose picture is printed here will be at Revere Beach this afternoon. She will stroll along Ocean avenue, the Boulevard and the beach from Caudill's Dance Hall to Revere street, between the hours of 2 and 5 o'clock this afternoon, unless captured before 5 o'clock. The man, woman or child who identifies her will receive from her a Boston AMERICAN order for $100.00 in gold.

The only requirement is that the person identifying The Lady with the Green Parasol" have in his or her mit in plain sight, a copy of the Sunday AMERICAN and shall say to her: "You are the Lady with the Green Parasol."

Don't be afraid that "The Lady with the Green Parasol" will not be at the place appointed at the time appointed. She will be there and some American reader will be $100 richer because of her presence at Revere Beach.

She will not hide from you or attempt to conceal herself. She will not go into any buildings or other place where it would be possible for her to keep out of sight of the public.

She will be in plain view.

The Hammonds have been married thirty-one years and there are four wonderful children.

NEW BEDFORD MILL STRIKE SETTLES DOWN TO A MARATHON

City Faces Most Serious Situation in Its Industrial History, with 15,000 Idle and Mill Life Practically Paralyzed

Owners Declare Situation Excellent for a Long Shut-Down and That They Would Just as Soon Close All Summer

Strikers Planning for Long Siege and Are Soliciting Funds—Ranks Torn by Strife Between Two Rival Labor Organizations

NEW BEDFORD, July 20.—The New Bedford strike has settled down ... an industrial marathon.

Headed ... it appears, it will be purely an endurance contest between the strikers and the mill men.

Merely ... New Bedford faces the most serious situation in its industrial history. Since ... mill operatives either struck or were locked out of the mills as a result of a dispute over the ... agreement, the town's industrial ... has been practically paralyzed. Here are a few facts indicative of the serious ... of the situation:

Fifteen thousand workers ... on strike or are locked out. This is more than one in ten of the total ... of the city, 110,000.

Each week of the strike, it is estimated, costs the city industrially $700,000.

Each day of the strike ... is more operatives away from the city never to return, thus crippling the complicated mill organization.

It took Fall River five years to recover from her 1904 strike. This disturbance in New Bedford promises to be equally ... serious in its effect.

Twelve Plants Closed.

Twelve of the great cotton plants are shut down indefinitely. They are the old established plants. Their owners declare the industrial situation is excellent for a shut-down, and they would as soon not work at all this Summer as to reopen the mills. The presidential race has somewhat unsettled the cotton market, and the mills were already facing "hard times" before the strike began.

The strikers are preparing for a long siege, also. The weavers have named a committee to solicit funds. The United Textile Workers have sufficient money on hand to finance, the strike till October, while the I. W. W. is rapidly collecting subscriptions. The loomfixers still at work in the seven newer mills have voted to assess themselves to aid the strike.

Both unions are hampered by splits in the ranks. Among the workers, the A. F. of L. is no more bitter against the mill men than it is against the I. W. W. The latter organization has declared a general strike while the former has made a peace pact with the seven mills now running, the mills having agreed never to re-establish the grading system.

Among the mills, twelve are closed down, while seven have agreed to the strike demands and are still running. This fact, the stand of the seven mills—is a strong argument in the minds of many against the mill men's plea of hard times and inability to accede to the strikers' demands.

Mill Men's Side.

The mill men's side of the case is stated by the Boston News Bureau as follows:

"If for no other reason than the plea of the dire poverty of the past two years, the twelve New Bedford cotton mills now under strike would be amply justified in refusing to grant any concessions to employes at present.

"With the exception of the Kilburn mills, these mills are the old pre-Civil War New Bedford concerns, which has been continued by the sharp depression which existed in upon the fine profits ... of the Southern mills, twelve are at present ... to stockholders, while the Kilburn has accumulation of $ per ... upon its preferred stock ... were obliged to reduce ... Bristol, paying 4 per ... has been pleased ... to 4 per ... to 10 and ... to 8 per cent. ... some of the ... more or less precarious ... the low ... dividend rates seems of small importance when compared with the drastic ... in the ... value of these mills which has occurred in the past two or two and a half years. From the peak of 1909-1910 there has been a net decline of $4,881,125 in the market price of ten of the twelve New Bedford cotton mills, a depreciation equivalent to nearly 40 per cent.

The average market price of the seven ten mills has dropped 41¼ points, or from 188 to 146¾. Accuhaet has melted away 30 points, five of which have come in the past fortnight; the big and prosperous Pierce has dropped 91 points; Grinnell, 70; Bristol, 59, and the others in like proportion. Even Dartmouth, preferred, a steady 5 per cent payer, has slumped away 8 points under the feeling of uncertainty as to New Bedford mill values. There is not a single mill in New Bedford whose stock has not felt the blighting touch of adversity.

Upon the duration of the strike depends New Bedford's future prosperity. With the paying off of the locked-out operatives this week end the manufacturers have said their last word.

Last Pay Day.

When the bulk of the weavers, carders, spinners and loom fixers received their pay envelopes, it was their last pay day. From now on the strikers will have to exist on the $5 paid weekly by the unions. Families have to be supported on this meagre sum, and the grocer has hung out the "cash only" sign. Still the strikers are enthusiastic over the strike and predict victory for their cause.

Of the 15,000 men, women and [illegible] hundreds of the weavers are still in their teens—5,000 are of English extraction, 4,000 are of French-Canadian descent, 2,500 are of Portuguese origin and the balance is made up of Italians, Poles, Syrians and Greeks. The [illegible] of the latter races are allied with the Industrial Workers of the World.

The fight for the abolition of the grading system was begun by the Weavers' Federation, of which [illegible] Duffy is secretary, and the [illegible]. Soon after the posting of the grading notices on June 26, the weavers sent an ultimatum to the cotton manufacturers demanding that the notices be taken down or a strike would result.

On the [illegible] of July, the manufacturers met in Masonic building and after a lengthy discussion, voted to hold fast to the grading system. In a signed statement, which reflected the attitude of the corporations, William O. Devoll, secretary of the Manufacturers' Association, said:

"The requirements of our business demand [illegible] the matter of quality. Our contracts are made with the understanding that the buyer is obliged to take only five per cent of his purchase as second quality, and that at a reduced price. During the period that the grading system was suspended second quality increased fully [illegible] hundred per cent.

Tie-Up Complete.

The weavers' answer was to strike, and on Monday, July 15, the operatives remained away from the looms. So complete was the tie-up that the manufacturers promptly decided upon the indefinite shutdown of their plants and on Tuesday the United Textile Workers, acting through the emergency committee, gave its official sanction to the strike and appeals for financial aid from affiliated organizations have been sent out.

As in the Lawrence strike the I. W. W. is at loggerheads with the A. F. of L. The Industrial Workers desired to extend the strike to all mills in the city but so far their influence has been limited to placing pickets at the mill gates.

A. F. of L. Against I. W. W.

The A. F. of L. will use every means in its power to combat the I. W. W. and has rejected all overtures made for a joint conduct of the strike. The manufacturers intend, report has it, to bar I. W. W. members from the mills after the settlement of the strike has been effected. "They are an undesirable class of workmen," was the way one manufacturer put it.

"Whatever [illegible] this strike," he added, [illegible] members of this [illegible] Their organization is not large [illegible] any serious ex[illegible] number of operatives necessary [illegible] mills. And I know they are [illegible] enough to win the strike [illegible] not be in a position to dictate terms, as they did in Lawrence and Lowell."

Financial statistics of the New Bedford mills show that [illegible] profits have been made [illegible] past. In 1910 the Acushnet mills paid a dividend of 116 per cent [illegible] 96 per cent dividend in 1907. The Dartmouth mills, of which Walter H. Langshaw is the head, paid 66 per cent [illegible] 1907 and 66 per cent in 1908.

The enormous dividends anger the operatives, who claim they should share in the profits.

As to the conduct of the strike, peaceful means may be expected. The A. F. of L. leaders are opposed to violence of any kind and the stiff sentences meted out by Judge Frank A. Milliken to the Butler mill offenders has had a wholesome effect. The activities of the police department further mitigate against a repetition of the riot.

The exodus of hundreds of operatives to other cities where strife is not rampant is disquieting to the mill agents, who realize that their organization will be shattered by the shutdown.

FLYING AT WEIRS.

Atwood to Use Hydro-Aeroplane on the Lake.

Harry Atwood is to put in a week of plain and fancy aviating at The Weirs, Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H., beginning Saturday, July 20. Atwood will use a new hydro-aeroplane, rising from the surface of the lake, circling high in air and landing on the water. He is planning to take up passengers, so vacationists at the Weirs who wish to try an air ride will have a chance. Atwood plans to give the Lake Winnipesaukee region some around flying, volplaning, spiral work and dips such as that vacation resort has never beheld yet.

WOMEN OVERSHADOW MEN AT SUMMER SCHOOL

SOME OF THE GYMNASIUM GIRLS AT THE HARVARD SUMMER SCHOOL.

Nearly All the Students Now at Harvard Are from West and Southwest

By SYBIL WARNE.

More women than men are studying this year at the Harvard Summer School.

More women are studying English than men.

More women are studying the fine arts than men.

More women are taking the government course than men.

More women are taking Latin than men.

More women are taking psychology than men.

ANOTHER interesting item of information is that the women come a longer distance than the men. Only one woman is from Japan, Dorothea Kiuchi. There is none from the Philippines.

Of the 488 students enrolled nearly 300 are women. Nearly all of these are from the West and Southwest. There are more women from California than men. Texas sends more women than men. Other States show a large proportion of women.

[illegible] women formerly showed an interest are now forsaken. [illegible] women showed a preference for [illegible]. Today not one woman is studying [illegible] branch of knowledge. Only one is enrolled on the mathematic course, while in the history course women outnumber the men.

[illegible] have also turned their backs upon French. When the Summer school first started, this course was very popular with the fair sex.

Gaining in Sociology.

[illegible] gaining on the men in the study of sociology. They are good competitors with the men in the course of physical education. Not one woman is studying astronomy. More women than men are studying German. What does all this mean?

It means that women are coming to the fore in [illegible] of knowledge that [illegible].

During my walks around the grounds, I found many women sitting on the benches looking over their notes on physical education. Others were talking about the value of an English sentence. Many of [illegible] in High schools.

It was not [illegible] surprising to hear [illegible] the matter of civil government and [illegible] with others [illegible] No doubt they were getting fortified for their lecture and preparing ammunition to put before the instructor.

Why should German be more popular than French with the coming women?

I asked this [illegible] that I [illegible] was that [illegible] women wanted to be able to read German philosophers in the original and not depend upon translation.

Many from the West.

Many of these women are from the West. They have the philosophic mind. You could hear them talking around in groups about different German philosophers. Some were [illegible] were [illegible]. Blondes [illegible] to French [illegible] psychology of this is hard to explain. Women are [illegible] changing in [illegible] literary tastes.

[illegible] over to this Summer school and mark [illegible] studies [illegible] attract [illegible] women.

I asked [illegible] who had an armful of books, wearing glasses and walking [illegible] thoughtfully through the campus. "Do you not like domestic science?"

"Well, I like it well enough, but I haven't come from Texas to study that," she replied. "We know how to cook pretty well down there but we've come here to get something about English."

I found all the women from Texas studying English.

I could not find any woman studying chemistry. I found many studying psychology, mostly women physicians. In this course on this study were a motley crowd of instructors from Western colleges down to probation officers. William Healy, director of the Juvenile Psychopathic Institute of Chicago, is in charge, and it must be interesting work to have so many different types of students enrolled in his department.

On the campus I stopped a young man from India who gave me much interesting information. He said that his country wanted to know more about the ways of America and he thought that as he was a Hindoo he could take something back to his people that their institutions of learning could not give.

The Shakespearean class in Sever Hall under the charge of Professor Neilson showed a large proportion of women. Most of them were very young.

Not a few women were found studying poetry in its forms and the history of the poetic theory. After seeing these young women I could not help feeling how woman has changed. Formerly most of these young women would spend their Summer vacation in lounging on some hotel verandas. At least three-fourths of the vacation of teachers throughout the United States is spent in some practical way in adding to their store of knowledge. Women are coming to the front. There is no question about it.

The Physical Training.

When I entered Hemenway Gymnasium I found Dr. Dudley Sargent watching about 100 young men and women go through their physical training.

It was a very impressive sight to see women using force with as much agility as men.

"Here's where the Olympic games start," said Dr. Sargent, referring to the different exercises that were going on. "What is being taught here in physical education will have its effect upon the future of hundreds throughout the United States. We have students from [illegible] Japan. Dorothea [illegible] has been at Oberlin College and is now equipping herself in knowledge [illegible] own country. Most of those taking part in the exercises are young teachers making themselves proficient in their several branches.

"I do not know anything that shows so completely the possibilities of womankind as the kind of training which they receive in such a place as this."

Heat Had No Terrors.

"At [illegible] the heat these young women did [illegible]. They showed their powers of endurance."

It was evident that women today are giving their attention to other matters than those commonly associated with the sex, for when I went into the place where Dr. Davison, organist of Appleton Chapel, was giving instruction upon music in its different branches, I found only two women taking the lectures. It was not so long ago that women made more of this study [illegible].

The registration of the school is larger than before. The course lasts six weeks. Professor James Hardy Ropes is again in direct charge of the school. The many diversions for the students have been arranged, including many trips to historical points. The school will close August 1.

WOLLASTON CHURCH TO VINDICATE PASTOR

Plan for Action on Rev. W. B. Ayers at Meeting to Be Held on August 3.

Rev. William B. Ayers, pastor of the Park and Downs Congregational Church of Wollaston, who has been sued for $[illegible] by Chester A. Boynton of Revere for alleged alienation of the affections of his wife, Mrs. Helen Willett Boynton, is to be formally exonerated of charges made against him by his enemies, it was stated last night. The vindication of the minister is planned to take place at a meeting of the church body on Saturday night, August 3.

The decision to clear the Rev. Mr. Ayers of all blame by a full vote of the congregation came as a result of a meeting [illegible] at which [illegible] a statement [illegible] secretary of the [illegible] Congregational Ministers. This statement praised the Rev. Mr. Ayers and declared all the accusations [illegible] untrue.

Friends of the pastor in the church have announced they will attempt to bring witnesses to testify as to the clergyman's character [illegible] opposed to Mr. Boynton say they will put a stop to all trouble in the church.

It was given out yesterday that unless Mr. Boynton withdraws his suit against Rev. Mr. Ayers he will be summarily dismissed from the church. Two weeks ago Mr. Boynton was suspended from membership until January 1.

[illegible] considered is to have [illegible] August 3 and hear statements by both the Ayers and the Boynton factions. Friends of the pastor say this may be a means of reuniting the two factions and of bringing harmony into the church.

[illegible] Mrs. Heims charged her husband with cruel and abusive treatment. He answered with a cross-libel, [illegible] Judge Quinn ruled against Mrs. Heims.

FOSS' RECORD WILL BE HIS PLATFORM

Papers Out for Renomination of the Governor for the Third Time.

Governor Foss will contest in the primaries of September 24 for the Democratic nomination for Governor. His platform will be his record during his two years as chief magistrate.

No elaborate declaration of principles or platitudes [illegible] for the entry for a third nomination of Governor Foss into the State primaries.

"My platform is my record," the Governor declared last night. "The field is [illegible] open one to any Democrat who [illegible] to enter. That is a right that any Democrat has. If the Democrats of the Commonwealth prefer District Attorney Pelletier or any other Democrat to myself they have an opportunity in the direct primaries to make their decision known. If the Democrats of the State desire me again for their candidate they ought to have me. If they desire Mr. Pelletier they should have him. There's no harm in rival candidates when the people can do make their choice. This they will do on September 24 and [illegible] Massachusetts will have a Democratic Governor again in 1913.

Denies Bust Could Grow So Rapidly

Judge Rules Six Inches in Ten Months is Unlikely and Finds Against Tailor.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Municipal Judge Fake decided that under ordinary circumstances a woman's bust measurement could not increase six inches in ten months. In October 1911, Mrs. Rebecca West, 1640 North Leavitt street, had a coat made by John Stanaitis, 1316 West North avenue.

Her measurements at that time were as follows: Bust, 47; waist, 36; hip, 52.

Mrs. West, who was suing the tailor for the return of her money, alleged that the coat did not fit. She put the coat on to prove her assertion. There was a ripping [illegible] the garment in front, she was unable to lift her arms.

"Decidedly," said the Court, "the coat does not fit."

"But," objected Stanaitis, "Mrs. West's measurements are at least six inches larger than they were in October. The coat fitted her then."

Mrs. West said [illegible] more than she did [illegible] and the Court decided in her favor.

UNITED SHOE MACHINERY COMPANY SUIT INTERESTS TRADE OF ENTIRE COUNTRY

BESIDES learning whether the United Shoe Machinery Company is a monopoly, and whether its practices are fair to the shoe industry of the United States, when the case of the United Shoe Machinery Company against Charles H. Jones is tried, plenty of new libel law will be made.

How much in spirit and reputation can a bloodless corporation be damaged by harsh words when the laws says a corporation has no soul?

The answer of the United Shoe Machinery Company to the several thousand interrogatories asked in the suit by the ingenious Edward F. McClennen, of counsel for Mr. Jones, will do much, little or nothing for the shoe manufacturing trade of the United States.

Ingenuity in questions and answers can go no further. The public will learn something about shoe machinery, the shoe performing similar operations, needed in the ordinary processes of manufacturing certain kinds of boots and shoes?

"What, if any, kind of machine-made boots and shoes were there, in the ordinary processes of the manufacture of which such a machine was not needed?"

To this entire group of questions, the company made the following answer:

"These questions are ambiguous. Not sufficient facts are given to form an intelligent opinion. I do not desire to express an opinion unless the court orders me to do so."

The United Shoe Company, through President Winslow, cites some thirty seven of the machines listed in which they were not dealing on the date named.

The court ordered the company to prepare answers to this group, numbers 15 to 494.

The second group of questions includes numbers 499 to 2,178. These questions are repetitions of a group of seven interrogatories, the names of the different machines listed in question 11 being inserted in the blank left.

"On or about July 24, 1911, was any ——, to your knowledge, manufactured in the United States by any other company except the plaintiff company?"

"To what extent was such manufacture carried on?"

"What concerns were engaged in this manufacture?"

"Were other machines manufactured for the same operations?"

"If so, to what extent?"

"What was the name or what were the names of such other machines?"

"By whom were they manufactured?"

To these questions, 1,679 of them, the company, through President Winslow, made the following answer:

"I have no official information on these subjects, and am advised that I am not required to seek such information unless ordered to do so by the court."

The court ordered that these questions be answered.

Company's Leases.

There follow a number of questions on the general subject of the leases issued by the company, with the blank lease forms attached as exhibits.

Question 2208 reads as follows:

"Is it true that in the leases, if any, of machines of the plaintiff corporation's Goodyear auxiliary department, so called, issued prior to July 24, 1911, any of the leases have contained a provision that such machines should not be used on shoes either welt or turn-sewed by machines obtained from any except the plaintiff company?"

The answer to this question reads in part as follows:

"——The Goodyear auxiliary machines, having been designed and made especially to prepare the shoe for the operation of the plaintiff's welt and turn-sewing machines, and to finish the shoe after these operations, and the payment for all being measured by the operations of the principal machines, are leased with the provision named."

Questions similar to Question 2,208 were asked, in which different machines were used. To other questions, the company made different answers, the answer in many cases being simply "No."

Question 2,230 reads as follows:

"If a manufacturer having the machines of the plaintiff company's Goodyear department had other operations—performed by machines obtained from others than the plaintiff company, what machines could he secure for departments of his manufacture from the plaintiff company?"

The answer was:

"If he held a lease containing no restrictions as to the machines to be used in his manufacture, he could obtain any of the machines from any of the departments named:——"

Question 2,238—"Is it true that any large manufacturer of shoes in Massachusetts, if he was making machine-made shoes, must get the important machines —— from the plaintiff company unless he could install an entire plant from other sources?"

trade and the libel law when the suit is heard.

Charles H. Jones is head of the Commonwealth Shoe & Leather Company. Damages of $100,000 are demanded by the United Shoe Machinery Company. This company alleges that it was libelled on July 24, 1911, by a certain statement published in the Boston News Bureau, which statement, the plaintiff charges, was the utterance of Mr. Jones.

Choate, Hall & Stewart are for the plaintiff. Brandeis, Nutter & Dunbar are counsel for Mr. Jones.

Hearing Before Auditor.

The whole case will open up the relations of the United Shoe Machinery Company toward the shoe manufacturing trade of the country.

In view of the complicated and technical nature of much of the testimony, hinging, as it will, on a group of five leases used by the United Shoe Company in its dealings with shoe manufacturers, the defendants' counsel have asked the Superior Court for a hearing before an auditor in the first instance.

If this request be granted and an auditor agreed upon, his report will form the basis for a trial before a jury. This cannot be had much earlier than next Spring.

Counsel for the defendant has filed a set of interrogatories.

The United Shoe Company, through President Winslow, made answer to some of the questions. To others the answers were:

"I have no official knowledge."

"I am advised it is not necessary for me to answer."

"I am advised I need not answer unless ordered to do so by the court."

Judge Pierce has ordered that full answers be prepared in place of these replies first made.

One of the original interrogatories, No. 2,263, reads.

"Had any other parties previously made the same statement which is the basis of this suit, alleged to be libellous."

Mr. Winslow's answer read:

"I never heard this falsehood, save from the defendant."

Mr. Jones' attorneys moved that this answer be stricken out as not responsive and improper in form. This motion was granted.

The 2,300 interrogatories, if answered, according to Attorney McClennen of defendant's counsel, will benefit the case of his client. He declares, under oath, that they are not put for purposes of delay and the Court has ordered Mr. Winslow to answer.

The alleged libellous utterances of Mr. Jones are charged to have been published in the Boston News Bureau. The statement was:

"A shoe manufacturer has no alternative but to lease all his machinery from the United Shoe Company, or to stay out of business."

The company, in its answers to the interrogatories, declares that 90 per cent. of all shoe manufacturers in the country use at least one of the company's machines.

With the filing of the suit, an attachment was asked for $100,000—the amount of the alleged libel. This was in July, 1911. May 8, 1912, a motion to non suit the company was denied. On July 11, complete answers to the interrogatories were ordered made. The main body of the interrogatories offered by Mr. Jones' attorneys are divided into two great classes.

In question eleven, 239 shoe machines are named.

Questions fifteen to four hundred and ninety-four are made up of the following two interrogatories, the name of each of the machines listed in question eleven, being inserted in the blank:

"On or about July 24, 1911, was any ——, or a machine or machines

Will Try to Halt Work On Town's New School

WHITMAN, July 20.—Ordinarily in building a schoolhouse there is complaint because of lack of speed. But Selectman Waldo Dyer has announced he proposes to get out an injunction to force the architects and contractors to quit work on the High School.

Selectman Dyer had a special town meeting called, against the wishes of the other Selectmen, to talk over the schoolhouse proposition. Dyer says there is doubt whether they ought to build the kind of a structure that is being put up.

But before Dyer could do business the meeting dissolved by a vote of 137 to 65 after there had been talk to the effect that the gathering was illegal. It was then Dyer threatened an injunction and asserted he would call another town meeting.

He awoke at Young's hotel yesterday [illegible] acutely from stomach [illegible] so serious that Dr. W[illegible] was summoned. He told [illegible] what he needs more than [illegible] a prolonged rest. Until [illegible] thorough diagnosis Dr. [illegible] say whether the Mayor [illegible] a form of ptomaine po[isoning] [illegible] he has been inoculated [illegible] germs.

The Mayor left for [illegible] yesterday afternoon feeling much better. He refused to take the doctor's advice and remain in bed yesterday and was at his office two hours after Dr. Gallivan left the hotel.

The Mayor says he will be at his office Monday as he has promised to use every effort to assist the striking carmen and a report upon that situation is expected from the State Board the first of the week.

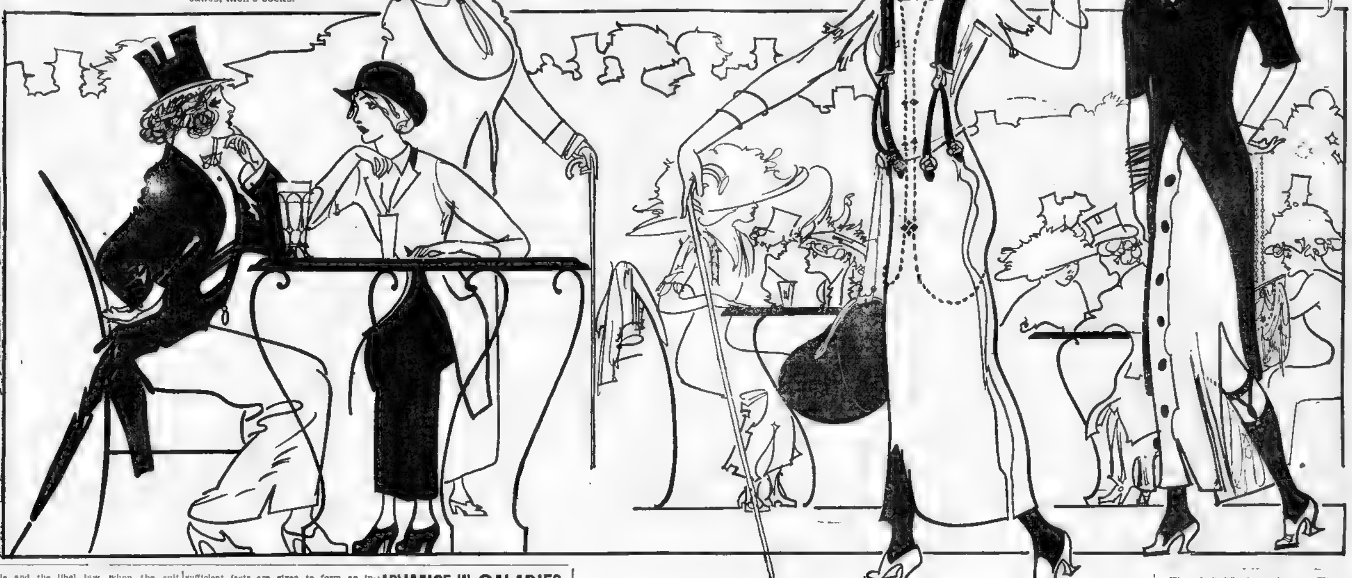
Since his return from Baltimore, the Mayor has complained of not being in the best of health. Physicians who have talked with him informally have told him that his condition is due to the fact that he eats irregularly and sleeps on an average of but five hours in the twenty-four.

Women Wearing Suspenders; Men's Garters, Too
Carrying Canes, Also. Where? Oh, in Paris

HOW WOMEN OF PARIS ARE COPYING MEN'S ATTIRE.

Frederick Johns says: "Before these fashions get to America, men ought to organize in the interests of their belongings. French women are wearing men's hats, men's coats, men's shirts, men's suspenders, men's garters, men's canes, men's socks."

One notices the Parisian women are wearing men's socks.



By FREDERICK JOHNS.

PARIS, July 5.—Women are going to wear suspenders this season. They are doing it now in Paris. If the fashion spreads to America no man will be safe.

The suspenders that French women are wearing are just like the men's. They don't differ in any degree. They cross beneath the shoulders and button upon the—ah!—skirt in the good old fashioned way.

The first pair of female suspenders I saw were displayed in a restaurant. I was at dinner with a friend when a French couple entered and [illegible] the next chairs. The lady wore a gray tailor-made suit and as soon as she was seated removed her jacket. Then I saw them.

They were silk, and were just like the Christmas present kind that every man gets from his women relatives.

The skirt didn't have any belt, but [illegible] proper places to [illegible] they buttoned onto. [illegible] In the back they looked familiar except they did not have "For firemen, policemen and icemen" on them.

I winked at my friend, but he didn't betray the slightest interest.

"Hah," he said. "I've seen lots of them. Some aren't even silk. They look as if they'd been unbuttoned from the [illegible] man's Sunday trousers. They're talking of forming a Frenchman's Suspender Protective Association in the Interest of Public Morals.

"The French women this year think it is clever to adopt masculine styles. Look around you and you'll see them everywhere."

I had thought there was something funny about women's clothes this year, but I had never scrutinized closely. I opened my eyes. The first thing I noticed was that most women are wearing jackets cut something like a man's dress coat, with long tails [illegible].

Then I saw that they were wearing white linen collars and men's cravats.

My Goodness, What Next!

Then I noticed that the skirts tapered so [illegible] like trousers as [illegible] and honestly, if it weren't [illegible] appear here and there in [illegible] of the skirts the poor th[ings] [illegible] with.

A still more [illegible] discovery was made [illegible] happened to [illegible]. Most of the ladies who [illegible] streets wore socks [illegible] of [illegible] and held them [illegible] garters.

That [illegible] at the opera I saw a creature [illegible] half [illegible] and half female.

It wore a [illegible] of undulated [illegible] dress coat, white stiff [illegible] white cravat. [illegible] was the only [illegible] of [h]er sex, and I'm sure I [illegible] know why she didn't wear [illegible].

"That is M[illegible] of the Opera Comique," [illegible] with ever [illegible].

Sad Outlook for Mere Man.

Walking about the Opera House, I encountered two or three more imitation men, and one of them topped everything off by wearing a monocle.

Did I say that scores of women, even those with bare shoulders, were carrying canes? It is true.

Before these fashions get to America men ought to organize in the interests of their belongings. French women are wearing men's hats, men's coats, men's shirts, men's suspenders, men's garters, men's canes, men's socks. They have taken everything but the trousers. Those may be the next.

Ball and Chain, Maybe, for Bathing Trunks

Bath Trustees Seek Way to Prevent Purloining from City—27,000 Towels Stolen in 1912.

Chairman William Murphy of the Bath Trustees offered a trophy to any one who can suggest some way to keep bathers who swim, under the auspices of the city, from purloining the bathing trunks and towels. Here is a suggestion he received yesterday:

Dear Mr. Murphy: I suggest that you attach a ball and chain to the trunks and nail the end of the towel to the wall.

BILL, THE FISH.

There were 27,000 towels stolen last year. There were 35,000 new towels procured this season and a third of them is gone already. Some people think that when they pay five cents for the bathing trunks and one cent for the towel that they have bought them. Murphy says this is an egregious error.

A fireless cooker is one of the novelties to be upon the table, and several Boston and other firms of prominence have contributed generously to the fair.

The plans are under the general chairmanship of Miss Leslie Bradley, assisted by her mother, Mrs. Robert S. Bradley of Pride's Crossing. The fair has been planned to aid the work of the Children's Island Sanitarium at Marblehead.

Visitors Have Merry Days and Incidentally Honor Founder of Ancient Company.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

LONDON, July 13.—The Boston Ancients have come to London and London has swallowed them up. For three days they have been in the largest capital in the world, parading its streets, visiting its palaces and museums and its music halls and cafes without exciting any uproar or furor among the populace.

"I never realized what a great city London really was until I saw how little space the London newspapers were able to devote to us," remarked Colonel Sidney O. Bigney at the end of the first day.

And if it wasn't for the American flag they carry, the Boston Ancients wouldn't [illegible] for their uniform resembles those of several British regiments whose officers are frequently seen on the streets of the big town.

So I can't conscienciously declare that the Boston Ancients have conquered London, or even thrown a scare into the serious and podgy Englishmen.

Nevertheless, they are getting all kinds of attention from [illegible] England [illegible] and best of all the London Honorable Artillery Company.

Served Afternoon Tea.

[illegible] processions and feeds, especially the latter. The Boston Ancients are famous eaters, and it has always been their custom to include as many meals as possible in the day's routine. The Londoners, however, put one over on them when they marched them solemnly to a hotel to take afternoon tea.

Afternoon tea was served at Windsor Castle [illegible] feature of [illegible] future Lord [illegible] nded the London Company when they visited Boston, is still in charge of the parent company. He is as youthful as ever and quite as ready to fraternize and be hail fellow well met with [illegible].

The Londoners who made that memorable voyage to Boston, have never forgotten it, and they eagerly sought in the ranks of the visitors old friends and chums. They were very much disap- [illegible] of the [illegible] you of the [illegible] landing in England, [illegible] London Armory, the unveiling of the Kane memorial tablet at Windsor Castle, the tremendous return dinner at the Hotel Cecil, and the great review at Buckingham Palace.

[illegible] of this tour from the time the ship left Boston Light and the Ancients found themselves with eight days between them and the Bar (sand, not booze) of Liverpool.

Captain Frank Appleton made arrangements with Captain Finch of the Arabic to have the exclusive use of the sun deck for a couple of hours each morning for drill purposes.

Everybody knows that the Ancients are not particularly strong upon manoeuvres, but the Britishers have no sense of humor and it would never do to let King George at the big review which was to come. Who knows? He might even prevent the London Honourables from associating with them.

Accordingly all the Ancients were compelled to drill every day. Captain Alfred E. Smith, surgeon of the company, excused no one, not even on account of fat [illegible] Milton Page and other company mammouths were forced to work.

In order that no passengers might see them in their misery they were screened from view by fences of canvas, and the passengers had to content themselves with the elephantine tread of marches on the deck above their heads.

The Arabic sailed on the second of July. On the Fourth there was a celebration. It was probably the most elaborate and complete celebration of the Fourth ever held upon an ocean liner. All passengers irrespective of nationality were compelled to assist, and there was no let up from the rising of the sun until the rising of the same next morning.

A minute please, we go to fast. As Boston Light was fading from view several members of the Ancient and Honorable Company espied approaching a very tall, distinguished looking gentleman, wearing a slight sandy mustache, an English tweed suit and a very bored expression.

Said Sergeant Frank Howard to Captain Frank Appleton, forgetting to salute in his excitement "Captain, if my eyes do [illegible] none other [illegible] Russell [illegible] I forgot.

[illegible] the [illegible] of Joe [illegible] may be found turning up among the Ancients as this narrative proceeds.

It may have been 6 a. m., perhaps 6.30, anyway it was a frightfully early hour, when the passengers on the Arabic, English and Scandanavians, as well as Americans, were awakened by the sound of bugles. They were blowing the reville and the buglars paraded through all the aleys and corridors of the ship. The musicians went through the whole ship and didn't even have pity upon the lowly [illegible] who didn't know it was the Fourth and didn't much care.

When everybody was awake it was found that Colonel Sidney Hedges had fallen asleep again. A private was told off to prod him and keep prodding him every time he fell asleep.

About 7.30 from the extreme stern of the ship there came a doleful noise. A messenger rushed up to Captain Finch and declared:

"Sir, I have the honor to report that a band of Antiques and Horribles have captured the ship and, led by the Gum-Arabic Hobo Band, they are coming this way."

And then they came. The passengers rubbed their eyes; they couldn't believe what they saw. First came the band. It was well described. It consisted of a dozen depraved musicians, unkept and hideous who made horrible noises upon all sorts of instruments. They were led by a drum major who was subsequently [illegible] Frank Howard, the moving picture theatre man.

There followed half a hundred of abject and monstrous creatures, all wearing masks. They capered about, took liberties with unoffending passengers, threw children into frights, and kissed several pretty and unwary girls.

Nobody knew who they were, but the Ancients were missed from their accustomed haunts and several were identified by their figures.

Later they posed in a group for the Boston AMERICAN and consented to remove their masks.

The devil was Dick Stoehr. The ballet girl, who was a very shameless creature, who tried to make love to Colonel Sidney O. Bigney in full view of the audience, turned out to be Lieutenant William McKenna.

Colonel Frank F. Cutting appeared as a living skeleton and was supplemented by Benjamin Cole as the fat lady. Colonel Frank F. Cutting was arrayed as a Cossack and George Homer, in a very dejected attitude, was a Boston National ball player.

[illegible] M Kenzie according to a friend [illegible] naturally and was a clown [illegible] Appleton [illegible] was a [illegible] Whitman was a dude. [illegible] was a society girl. Edward F. Hardy was supposed to be a bad man, and Colonel Sidney O. Bigney was impersonating a politician.

When Colonel Bigney came on board it was noticed that he had a very large amount of luggage. This luggage consisted largely of Attleboro jewelry, and some people accused him of trying to introduce it into England. Nothing of the sort.

On the Fourth of July most everybody on the boat received a present from Colonel Bigney, not only the Ancients, but many of the other passengers, both in the first and second class. Furthermore all the prizes given in the great deck game competition were donated by the colonel.

There were fobs, charms, chains, bracelets and other forms of golden jewelry. It looked all right, too.

The feature of the deck games was the fat men's race, which was won by Bob Hudson, who beat Milton C. Page and Sidney Hedges by a quarter of a mile. It was charged that Hudson should be disqualified on the ground that he wasn't a fat man, but as both of the other runners did not finish they had to award him a prize, an Attleboro loving cup.

The Fourth of July dinner was a special effort by the White Star line and went off very successful, as nobody mentioned the Titanic.

Of course there could not be a Fourth of July without a Fourth of July orator, and was it not fortunate that one of the real things in orators happened to be on board [illegible] was [illegible] Joseph [illegible] was on the [illegible] job, and all the Ancients, who are expert judges of speakers, and who never tolerate a dry one, declared that Joe "had done noble."

Frank Howard entertained with a series of patriotic motion pictures and stereopticon views, and afterwards the Ancients held a [illegible] old-fashioned smoke talk in the saloon which didn't break up until the sun peeked out of the east and the smoke room steward fell asleep at his post and couldn't set them up any more.

Lots of other things happened during the voyage but [illegible] a storm Doctor Smith reported not a single case of seasickness among his men, which is a most extraordinary record for soldiers on the water. The Ancients came to love the water.

"Isn't it glorious," declared Adjutant Jim Cody. "After all, I don't know why a man shouldn't take a drink of water now and then."

"Another remark like that," declared ex-Captain Fred McDonald, "and I shall use my influence to have you reduced to the ranks."

Admiring friends had carted to the pier an immense quantity of champagne, in spite of the well known fact that the best brands can be purchased on ocean liners at half the price demanded in America. As there is a strict prohibition against the importation of wines and liquors into Great Britain and as the Ancients are very law abiding, it was necessary to take extreme measures to hold members to their duty.

Adjutant Cody explained that he was theorizing and had no intention of going further.

The company arrived in Liverpool on July 11 and marched down the gangway amid the cheers of their fellow passengers and the crowd upon the pier.

A special committee of the London Honourable company had journeyed to Liverpool to meet the Americans headed by Colonel Stohwasser, who assured them that the entire London company would be at the Paddington station to meet them.

The journey to London was made by special train and the Ancients managed to sandwich in a luncheon during the four-hour journey. At Paddington, sure enough, was the London company, 150 strong, drawn up in parade formation to welcome their guests. The Earl of Denbigh, soldierly and handsome as ever, came forward and cordially greeted Captain Frank Appleton, his father, Frank Appleton, Sr., Colonel Sidney Hedges and his other friends and acquaintances in the company.

Met By London Company.

Led by the British company's band, the two Honorables marched down from Paddington, which is pretty close to two [illegible] and which tuckered out some of the older members of the party.

It was remarked then, that though the London Company was the parent organization and the Boston troupe its off spring, it looked the other way, for about two-thirds of the Boston troop are middle-aged or more, while most of the Londoners are young and active men.

The old incongruity of uniform, which marked the Boston Ancients, was absent during this procession, for most of the Bostonians wore the new regulation Ancients costume, which, as I remarked above, resembles greatly the uniforms of several British regiment.

Some of the veterans, however, insisted on disagreeing with the prevailing harmony. Major Maynard wore his service uniform of the Civil War and attracted much attention by its strange cut and worn appearance.

The Hotel Cecil was their haven, and the Boston troopers were left by the Londoners with instructions to spruce up for a whallacking big dinner out at Finsbury Pavement, where the Honorable Armory is located.

It happened that night that there was a wonderful Elizabethan pageant and tournament at Earl's Court. Dowager Alexandra was there and many of the nobility. The Duke of Marlborough and many other men of title were tilting in the ring wearing the ancient armor of their ancestors and breaking lances in the old-fashioned way.

Nevertheless the gathering at Finsbury was very remarkable.

The London Armory is much like our own regimental armories. As Lord Denbigh said, "It is a big whitewashed ark of a place where our recruities learn the goosestep." It was beautifully decorated and the tables were strewn with cool, fresh fragrant flowers.

At the head table were several score of guests including many high in the British army and bearing titles.

Lord Denbigh presided. At his right was Colonel Sidney M. Hedges, Major-General Sir A. E. Codrington, Captain J Caldwell, Major-General E. C. Bethune, Captain J. D. Cody and Colonel J. C. Wray.

On the other side of the chairman were Captain Frank Appleton, commanding the Boston company; Viscount Feilding, E. J. Howard Esq., Colonel Sir F. W. [illegible] Major General W. Fry and Captain Milton Paige.

A musical program, consisting of operatic and concert numbers, was furnished by singers and a large orchestra.

The toasts were, The King, the President, the Queen and Royal Family, the Royal Army, the Boston Artillery, the chairman.

Colonel Sidney Hedges, chairman of the tour committee presented on behalf of the company, a silver loving cup in the form of a gun shell.

He declared that on his last visit to Aldershot he had secured and taken home a spent shell, which now reposes in the Ancient's armory in Boston. The silver shell was in the way of reparation, or restitution.

Both companies fraternized in a most pronounced manner and the gathering stayed up late.

Friday morning began the second day's ceremonies, the visit to Windsor.

One of the objects of the Boston visit to London was to unveil a tablet at Windsor at the birthplace of Robert Kane.

Kane, as most people do not know, was born at Windsor Castle, somewhere around 1600; was a member of the London Honourable Company, which celebrated its 375th birthday in connection with the Boston visit, and finally came to Massachusetts Bay. In 1638 he formed the Boston Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company.

Col. Hedges and several other Ancients have been interesting themselves for several years in locating the birthplace of Kane, and, with the assistance of the Mayor of Windsor, Sir Robert Harris, finally found the exact spot. It is almost directly opposite Windsor Castle in the ancient town of Windsor.

To be sure the ancient dwelling has long since disappeared and it was a work of extreme difficulty to find the right place. Late that night I met an Ancient who was weeping bitterly.

"Supposing," he said, "just supposing it wasn't the right place at all."

TO RUSH TRIAL OF JUDGE ARCHBALD

Republicans Think Progressives Will Make Campaign Material of the Delay.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—A number of influential Republicans in the Senate are beginning to fear that the effect of a postponement of the impeachment case against Judge Archbald of the Court of Commerce. If they heed the pressure for an early adjournment, so their colleagues can get into the campaign, they will do so against their better judgment, and for obvious reasons.

One of these Senators, who would not permit it to be known that he was uneasy over the situation throughout the country said this afternoon that unless there was a prompt disposition of the charges against the accused judge, force and effect that were not to be desired would be given to the arguments of the progressives in favor of the recall of the judiciary. These progressives will use the delay in the Archbald case to prove their contention that it is practically impossible to obtain prompt action in impeachment [illegible] the only mean provided [illegible] of getting rid of undesirable justices it has proved a failure.

WHERE HAPPY GIRLS RUN JOYOUSLY FREE IN SEASIDE SECLUSION

Glimpses Into Mrs. Storrow's Feminine Republic Down Behind Annisquam Sand Hills

MRS. REID PLEADS HUSBAND'S FREEDOM

Though Rich Foster Mother of Boston Spurns Him, Bride Is Loyal.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20. Though his foster-mother, Mrs. Anna P. Reid, widow of a Boston millionaire, now living in Los Angeles, has refused to help him, the bride of Leslie Edward Wheeler Reid was welcomed up in full here charmed with embankment, but not deserted her young husband. After visiting him in jail today, the bride declared that though all others might forsake him, she would back a fight for his freedom.

Mrs. Reid, the youth's foster mother, declared that her adopted son has spent the money she gave him since she adopted him.

"I cannot help you," ran her message to him from Los Angeles. "You must get out of your trouble the best you can."

In striking contrast with the widow's determination, is the statement of the bride.

"I am so devoted to my husband as I ever was," said the young wife when she left the jail. "He needs me now more than ever, and I propose to stand by him until he is released and out of his present trouble.

"I can take only one view of Mrs. Reid's action," the bride went on. "You know she has disowned Leslie, something like $45,000 with which to start in business here. And the poor fellow failed to make good, that's all. His fate in this respect is like that of many other men. But perhaps Mrs. Reid has become discouraged."

Mrs. Reid came to Los Angeles from Boston a year ago. Having no heir or near relative she adopted young Wheeler. Mrs. Wheeler, mother of the boy, was in court, and gave consent to the adoption. It is now said the young man will appeal to his own mother to help him.

Reid, following his financial troubles, was spurned by the friends he wined and dined in the days when money was plentiful and the prospects were rosy. A, though his wife made a tearful canvass she was unable to raise bail for Reid.

The bail is $4,000, having been raised from $1,000 at the request of the complainant, Mrs. W. H. Swears of a New York company. She charges Reid obtained a diamond valued at $1,000 by a trick, and failed to return or pay for the gem.

How Workers from City Pass Out-of-Door Days Without a Blow to Their Independence.

A seaside camp for girls.
A co-operative camp.
A jolly camp.

THESE are the elements which make the Storrow camp for girls as nearly ideal as such institutions often become. One may search from the St. Lawrence to Long Island Sound and find no more complete and well organized a scheme for vacation than right down behind the sand dunes of Annisquam and West Gloucester.

Do you happen to know Miss Sally Baker? If not you are a long way from understanding and appreciating the Saturday Evening Girls' Camp. It is said on good authority that no one ever had a dull moment in Miss Beck's company and it goes farther than that. There is a spirit of adventure, of freedom, and of democracy that makes it hard for the stranger to understand who are leaders and who are just girls.

But the young women know who plans the good times, who milked the cow, who drives and takes care of the horse, arranges the weekly schedule, rows the boat, mothers the flock of extra, and train sick mile Jocks to behave himself as any gentleman should in a well-conducted girls' camp, the only exception being that he insists in biting and viciously growling at Mrs. James J. Storrow's white canvas shoes whenever the real mother of the camp comes to visit. Her sons of Miss Beck and the Jocks family later

Certainly Secluded.

This statement has been made that this camp is secluded. Anyone who has not tried to get to it, and who learns it is scarcely two-thirds of a mile from the popular Summer resort of Annisquam, might have doubts. But let the simple attempt to approach the feminine retreat by either of the two possible ways and be it happens to be "he," as it was in this case—will grow convinced with every stroke of the oar that old Captain Davis pulls against tide and wind, or with every step taken over the rocks from West Gloucester station that is an elastic five miles. The difficulties of approach either by land or by sea are sufficient to warrant the term "seclusion."

Then, too, a view from the top of a great rounded granite ledge, which serves as front lawn to the camp bungalow gives added proof of isolation. To the north, far away on the horizon, may be seen the Newburyport shore reaching toward Maine and the Isle of Shoals. Nearer is a strip of sea, dark, green, and dotted with white, where the strong North breeze tosses spray into the air. Still closer are the sand dunes irregular, gleaming white in the sun, and resembling a chain of miniature, snow-covered mountains.

Between these splendid hills of piled-up sand, and the camp, are the tide water marshes, cut into many patterns by ribbons of water.

Above the hill, upon which the house is situated, are dense bushes tied together by a wilderness of cat brier. To the North are swoods and rocks and swamps that two to all the way to West Gloucester and make a retreat for deer, rabbits and foxes. In all this scene scarcely a house is to be observed, and the campers are far away on the shores of the Ipswich river. The nearest neighbor is a quarter of a mile distant.

Where Everybody Works.

Into this wild wealth of nature the Library Club girls from No. 18 Hull street, Boston, come every Summer for their two weeks' vacation. The house accommodates fourteen regular campers and often a half dozen extra, for week ends and holidays. The camp has now been in existence six years and a new feature has been added lately by making room, especially in the early part of the season, for children from six months to three years old belonging to married members of the club.

"The best part of the whole camp," says Miss Beck, "is that there are no servants here. We all take a hand in the work, visitors not excepted. The weekly schedule is posted where all can see it immediately upon arriving and each girl knows at once her work for every day to come."

Here Miss Beck produced several green cards covered with numbers. Close inspection showed that every number represented a girl and the numbers were so mixed that each day the combination was changed. By the end of the week every number has been placed at least once opposite each kind of work mentioned. The tasks were: Morning, noon and supper dish-washing; noon and supper cookhip; cleaning floors; tending lamps.

"We make it a point," Miss Beck went on to explain, "to have every girl get some experience in all kinds of housework; for instance, in many girls' camps the best cooks prepare the meals, but here each camper has her opportunity two or three times a week to cook. In this way vaulable experience is obtained.

Girls Pay About All.

"Most of the running expenses of the camp are paid by the girls, including railroad fares. When dishes or new kitchen utensils are needed, they are purchased by the campers. In Winter plays and entertainments are given and the proceeds are devoted to the Summer camp. With the girls paying a regular amount each week and doing all the work, their expenses are kept down to the lowest point."

Here came more statistics to show that the cost of the camp for a season, which runs from the middle of June to September 15, exclusive of salaries, is about $872 for a few more than 100 girls. The cost of the board per week is about $1.78 and the whole cost for each girl $5.60. The largest expense is for butter, and last year the bill for that alone was $91. Milk comes next, at $72. The grist during the season turn four barrels of flour into bread and biscuit.

The United Fruit Company has proved a good friend to the girls by sending regularly a bunch of bananas. Much expense is saved by the flock of forty hens, which provided the campers last season with 110 dozen eggs. The one has been sold recently, as she refused to deal as generously with the campers as the hens.

The blueberry season has come, and was ushered in last Friday noon by a monster blueberry pie. Each girl had picked one cup of berries for the grand production. A feature that adds interest to meals in camp is the fact many of the dishes used are the work of girls who work in a North End pottery.

Campers From High Life.

Perhaps the best illustration of co-operation and democracy comes in the fact that every week two volunteers come to the camp from Miss Windsor's private school in Longwood—pupils rather than present pupils—and join the other girls who come from the North, West and South Ends. These young women, who have been brought up in luxury, take their places on the regular schedule, scrubbing and cooking with the others. Most of them belong to the Sewing Circle League, and are looking forward to opening a working girl's camp of their own, observed, and the campers are far away on the shores of the Ipswich river. The nearest neighbor is a quarter of a mile distant.

Evenings in the house and rainy days are occupied with dancing, reading, amateur theatrical and moving pictures," and singing. Most of the dramatic productions consist in a group of girls getting out with the jerky motions fam[illegible] productions, some of which are [illegible] one scene, without words, [illegible] audience guesses what it is.

Several evenings of an ample book-case are filled with books lent to the camp by the Boston Public Library. A piano in an opposite corner [illegible] for itself, except when an occasional [illegible] sticks. This musical [illegible] acquired, has been christened Jonathan [illegible] Jocks, and that being, [illegible] back to [illegible] family, most of the members of [illegible] have introduced already. Every member of Mrs. Storrow's camp may be interesting to many who wish to have a camp and run it in an economical, simple manner. There is in all large cities an increasing need of outing places where working girls can go with small expense and freedom, and where the small amount they are able to pay is sufficient to insure them independence.

The girls now at the camp are: Frances Sawyer, Annie [illegible] Josie Hirshberg, Hortia Crystal, Sonnie Nathan, Catharine Levine, Pauline Hornberg, Evelyn Rosen, Sarah Simes, Adeline Alberti, Sadie Vasegnara, Vatse Brunn, Helen Brunn, Elizabeth Anthony. Miss Elizabeth Rose, now also in Maine.

State Cheated by Own Coal Scales

Company, However, Refuses to Take Back "Excess"; Expert Called In.

The State of Massachusetts has been trying to cheat itself with its own coal scales.

The Locke Coal Company of Malden has the contract to coal Spot Pond pumping station in Stoneham. It delivers the coal in big auto trucks. The law requires that State coal shall be weighed on State scales, no matter what private ones it is weighed on first.

The truck load was first weighed on the Locke scales. When it arrived at the pumping station it was weighed on the State scales, which registered the load at 150 pounds more weight than the Locke scales had recorded.

"You're giving us too much coal for the money," said the Commonwealth.

"We are not. Leave it to us," said the Locke people.

The State called in Sealer Williams of Stoneham. He found the Spot Pond scales right to an ounce.

"This beats the Russell identity hearing," said the State. "Somebody's way to the bad."

The two sealers called in a scale expert. He found the Spot Pond scales 150 pounds shy on weight and readjusted them.

"We told you so," said the Locke company.

NATIONAL BANKS TO BE CONSOLIDATED

Fourth and Atlantic Are to Be Merged With H. K. Hallett as President.

The Fourth National Bank, which yesterday began to move from the Board of Trade Building to new quarters in the Exchange Building, will effect a merger soon, it was announced yesterday, with the Atlantic National Bank of State street.

The necessary two-thirds vote of the stockholders, it was said, would be obtained readily. Arthur W. Newell, who was president of the Fourth National Bank and who lost his life in the Titanic disaster, was eager that the merger be made. It is believed the joining of the banks will be beneficial to both, as both are doing a remunerative work largely.

Herbert K. Hallett, president of the Atlantic National, will be president of the consolidated bank. The combined deposits of the two will be $14,000,000. The capital of the Fourth National is $1,000,000, its surplus and profits are $900,000, and its deposits $9,000,000. The Atlantic capital is $500,000, its surplus and undivided profits are $700,000, and deposits $5,500,000.

BOY FIREBUG SAFE.

Is Sent Away Until He Reaches His Majority.

The next eleven years of the life of James B. Welch, the ten-year-old, self-confessed firebug of Charlestown, will be spent in some State institution for boys. The youthful incendiary was in the Charlestown District Court yesterday before Judge Prebe. The judge placed the boy in the care of the State Board of Charities until he reached the age of twenty-one.

Joseph J. Welch, the boys father, and his wife were in court today. The father thought that the boy should be put away. Little "Jimmie" Welch submitted to putting the fire in the hay sheds on Rutherford avenue, Charlestown, causing a loss of about $100,000. His only reason for the act was that he wanted to see the fire engines go by.

STEAM KILLS FIVE.

Liner Brings to Port Victims of Bursting Pipe

NEW YORK, July 20.—With five members of her crew [illegible] in coma, the Italian steamer Principe Di Piemonte, from Genoa, arrived today. The dead men were the first assistant engineer, the chief fireman and three sailors, who had been killed by the bursting of a steam pipe. One other man in the engine room was scalded badly.

$500,000 Fire in Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, B. C., July 20.—A fire that did damage amounting to $500,000 before it was checked broke out here early today. The Hotel Georges Hotel and the Angelus apartment house were destroyed, many of their guests having narrow escapes.

MAC VEAGH MAKES NEW ANDREW REPLY

Refers to New Assistant, Sherman Allen, as Capable of Telling the Truth.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20.—When Sherman Allen was sworn in as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury today, Secretary MacVeagh took the opportunity to answer Dr. A. Piatt Andrew's latest attack, in which he renewed charges that MacVeagh is incapable of managing treasury affairs and has demoralized the department staff.

In a speech to the heads of the treasury divisions assembled in the Secretary's office, MacVeagh said:

"Mr. Allen is a gentleman. I know his capacity for telling the truth, and I know he will tell it in the office as well as on the outside, and when the time comes for him to leave the service, Mr. Allen will be just as truthful as Lee McClung, treasurer of the United States, whom Dr. Andrew designated as one who had agreed with his charges that the Secretary is incapable."

As MacVeagh spoke he glanced in McClung's direction as though his remarks were intended for him.

McClung refused to discuss the incident, except to say he had no idea the Secretary was personal in his remarks. He reiterated he has no intention of resigning.

"AFFINITY" EARLE LOSES.

Vainly Pleads Case in Court for an Employe.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., July 20.—Ferdinand Pinney Earle appeared in the role of a lawyer before Justice Carpenter at Monroe and questioned witnesses who charged Ethlin Valentine, an employe of Earle, with an attempt at a serious crime. He was unsuccessful, however, as the court held Valentine for the Grand Jury. Miss Laura Corwin, the complainant, says she was attacked by Valentine. Her screams brought assistance.

BUSINESS IS IMPROVING. CROP PROSPECTS ARE FINE AND BOSTON NEEDS SHIPS

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, July 20.—The stock market continued dull during the week which ends today, but prices have crept upward until about on the level held previous to the most recent downward movement. The advance has been due to several causes as usual, for it is seldom that one alone is sufficient to either elevate or depress a market as a whole.

W. H. ROSS

The improvement in crop prospects has been the most potent bull agent. Reports from the Northwest have been especially gratifying. A big harvest is indicated by present conditions throughout that vast region. It has been the case more than once in the past that one or more parts of that territory have not produced crops up to the average of the others. But this year the tillage is going to be satisfactory all the way from the great lakes to the mountains.

RAILROADS EXPECT BIG TONNAGE.

Northwestern roads have notified big consumers along their lines to order coal early. The roads expect to be so taxed with moving crops that they cannot see how they will be able to handle bulky fuel at the same time. This precaution by the railroad managers shows how favorable the prospects are. They are men who are more accurate at business forecasts than any so-called experts. The latter in the government employ are never prone to optimistical exaggeration. All the indications are that this country is going to reap more agricultural profit than was expected two months ago.

The steady improvement in the steel and iron trades is another gratifying phase of a situation which is enlivened by better and better news from day to day concerning general business.

Too Hot for Stock Trading.

The weather has been one adverse to stock market conditions, and it usually is at this time of the year. When it averages as hot as it has so far this month it is as hard to promote activity in stocks as in any line of endeavor which calls for physical exertion. Dullness in security trading has not been confined to this country. In London there is even more complaint of public apathy, and business on Continental bourses has been more or less restricted for some time by prevailing foreign conditions.

Speculative interest throughout the world is due for a revival, and it will probably come when this country has finished presidential campaigning and collected $9,000,000,000 for its crops. The value of the agricultural yield has been estimated as high as that. But the country will do very well if it proves considerably less.

The market as it stands is far from being weak and any attempt to force liquidation continues to disclose more proof that stocks are scarce and held by strong interests. Weeks will probably elapse before the men who could stir the market into activity will change their present stand-pat attitude. They and the people in general are giving as little heed to politics at this time as to stocks. There is a disposition on the part of those who dominate finance to make no move until after the election or until, if that is possible, they can forecast its result.

Wage Question Is Serious.

Although the crop outlook is so fine and there is a patent improvement in trade conditions at large there are still clouds on the horizon. The result of the arbitration of the question of raising the wages of locomotive engineers on half a hundred lines means much to transportation corporations. [illegible] them, with freight rates as they are, can raise the pay of an army of employes without cutting dividends.

If the engineers are to get more pay the firemen will expect a raise, and there are other classes of employes also to be considered in this connection.

It is probable that public sentiment is slowing veering to a point favorable to the roads on the rate problem. This country cannot be prosperous with its common carriers operating at a loss. The roads have suffered from adverse public opinion engendered by rebating and other sins of the past.

But sooner or later it will be recognized as against public welfare to subject them to baiting by any legislature or governmental body. Some of the Western States will find their development checked by laws now on their statute books.

Panama Canal Problems.

There is less being said about transcontinental lines suffering through competition with Panama Canal ships. The growth of the West is going to provide the rails with all the traffic they can carry in spite of all water routes. But if they are debarred from owning steamships which can use the canal it is going to make a vast difference in their profits.

The question involved is one of the most serious which Congress has ever been called upon to consider. Congress needs statesmanship of [illegible] to solve several Canal problems. England has begun through diplomacy to try to deprive Americans of the [illegible] of the Panama Canal just as she has deprived the French [illegible] any especial rights they were entitled to in the Suez.

The Suez Canal cost about $80,000,000 and the French [illegible] of it. The British did not contribute, but are controlling that canal today, and incidentally ruling Egypt as well. When it is completed the Panama Canal will have cost the American people $400,000,000, and now England suggests that after spending all that money and digging the ditch through United States army officers and employes, this country has no more privilege in [illegible] with it than any other country. If England goes too far in pressing that point [illegible] may stir up a [illegible] motion which will involve the British Empire in more trouble than it can stand.

Japan Is With England.

Australia, which has no mercantile marine of consequence, has adopted a "Me too," resolution in her parliament. It is world-wide knowledge that Canada sees in the canal an asset which will be very much to Yankee advantage in the competition the Dominion is planning against the country.

It is suspected that Japan will be found back of Great Britain in [illegible] canal contention. George Washington advised his countrymen to forever keep clear of foreign entanglements, but that was before the days of steamships, before the United States had the Philippines and Hawaii to look after, and before the era of a foreign trade which requires a big navy for world-wide protection of vital national interests.

The Panama Canal is going to put the United States in a position where it will have to give more heed to foreign relations and it will need a still larger navy and a brand of diplomats who are able to [illegible] farther ahead when making treaties.

Boston Behind Baltimore.

Meanwhile almost every port along the North Atlantic coast is getting ready to do more business because of the canal and through extension of facilities, except Boston. Baltimore, which is less accessible to Europe by several days than this city, and is nowhere near as rich nor half as large as Greater Boston, is reaching out for more commerce. Baltimore, which has always tried to rival Boston as a port, is doing what the Maritime Provinces are doing. She is reaching for all the West Indies trade she can get.

The Munson Company will have a new steamship line operating between Baltimore and Havana by the end of this month. That will be a starter for the Oriole City. Next it is planned there to get more South American trade. It is worth having. That between the United States and several South American countries showed an average increase in exports of nearly 60 per cent. since 1910. Germany sees vast commercial opportunities in South America. If that country could crush Great Britain, how long would the Kaiser delay in putting the Monroe Doctrine to a supreme test?

The Panama Canal is not only going to stimulate coast-to-coast business, but it is going to mean a vastly increased market in South America for American goods.

Boston is the port of New England which in many lines is the greatest manufacturing section in the United States. It needs bigger markets. The present way to get them is to establish some Boston steamship lines.

Talk will not do it. What is required is capital and energy. No city nor individual, nor firm nor corporation can live entirely tomorrow because of yesterday.

NO WALL ST. CASH FOR CAMPAIGNERS

Big Corporations Will Decline to Pay Political Bills.

By B. C. FORBES.

NEW YORK, July 20.—We are between seasons in finance, in politics [illegible] in cotton, in speculation. What [illegible] will the country take when the [illegible] movement begins?

Is the United States about to enter a new era of magnificent prosperity—prosperity on a scale never yet witnessed in any land?

Or will depression return?

The hand of the barometer is struggling to point toward "Set Fair." Depressing elements a plenty, however, have to be overcome.

[illegible] the grain crops are evaporating as mist from a valley before a rising sun. Within a fortnight [illegible] well, bounteous harvests will be assured. Alert dealers in cereals, scenting coming events, are selling so freely that prices have tumbled precipitately. The Northwest promises to enjoy unprecedented prosperity.

Optimism Regarding Crops.

The South and the Southwest are not so near the edge of the wood. Cotton is late and the plant has had much to contend with. Quotations for this staple, unlike those for grain, are advancing. However, recovery in conditions may prove rapid. At the moment there is little occasion for pessimism.

Viewing the agricultural outlook as a whole, there is every reason for optimism. Says one staid authority: "Crop optimism in the Northwest has reached its maximum of good cheer. It is doubtful if the middle of July in former years ever saw the promise bigger and opinion so unanimous among the local trade that the harvest may break all records."

Trade is not uniformly active. Steel manufacturers continue to mark up prices, but consumers are not placing orders quite as freely at the new levels. The railroads, after delaying too long, are pressing for supplies of engines, cars and other equipment, but traffic congestion is inevitable if normal crops have to be moved.

What Engineers Want.

This is one unpleasant feature of the situation. Yet railroad managers cannot be blamed unreservedly, for investors have shown scant readiness to provide new capital for any purpose whatsoever.

And here let one word be said concerning the question of railroad wages, now under consideration by a weighty commission of arbitration.

The engineers' main demand is for "standardization" of wages. This principle, though plausible, is in danger of being pushed too far by organized bodies of workers. One man's work is often worth more than another's, even though both are engaged in the same occupation. God did not create men with "standardized" abilities.

Human beings should be given a measure of liberty to better themselves, to win promotion to do more meritorious work than mediocre colleagues. A hard-and-fast "standardization" rule tends to make men machines, to benumb their ambition, to spoil initiative, to discourage effort.

Such Methods Not Needed.

The sluggard would seek nothing better than a system of standardized" wages, but the more capable artisans, men of virile minds and responsive bodies, infused with enthusiasm for their duties, have no need for such rule-of-thumb methods of treatment. They want only a fair field for the free play of their energies.

Politics are still mixed. Capital has not yet diagnosed the outlook.

The truth is that Wall Street is on holiday. Scores of our most influential financiers have left the city. Many have gone abroad. They are leaving politics severely alone for the present. Not until the latter part of September will prospects begin to crystalize.

This much can be said now. Wall Street will contribute precious little to any of the campaigns. Corporation contributions will be the lightest since corporations came into existence.

ROAD AGAINST MEAT DIET.

Illinois Central Sends a Unique Circular to Its Employes.

CHICAGO, July 20.—The Illinois Central Railroad thinks its employes will be better off and more efficient if they do not eat so much meat. It says in a circular to them: "Not only do people eat too fast but they eat too much—put too much coal on the fire. Americans eat more meat than all other nations combined and it is said there is more kidney trouble in this country than in all other countries.

"Suppose the employes of the great rail road systems would stop eating meat, or eat meat once a day. The price of meat certainly would fall. Business would go on just the same. The men would feel better and do much more efficient work."

Publish All Statistics.

The National Conduit & Cable Company say: "On an absolutely sound situation copper would be reasonable at recent market prices, but what we plead for are thoroughly sound conditions upon which the manufacturer can bank with unshaken confidence. For that reason we also [illegible] the publicity of all particulars regarding the real statistical situation of the metal not only in one respect, but at mines, smelters and refineries. This information would tend to prevent the circulation of false alarm, and would also operate in the interest on market stability.

Coal Production.

Production of coal this month will be larger than in July of last year. The mines are working full time. This month's output will decrease the deficiency in production of 1912 as compared with last year possibly 1,000,000 tons. The trade expects an output of more than 6,000,000 tons. Lack of labor at the mines is still causing inconvenience. Some operators estimate the labor shortage as high as 20 per cent.

Decline in Consols.

LONDON, July 20.—Liberal bankers are indignant because the chancellor of the exchequer has attributed the continued fall in the price of government funds to such a remote cause as the Boer war and many of them are for withdrawing political support from their party.

Chino's June Production.

Production during June of the Chino Company amounted to approximately 1,[illegible]40,000 pounds of copper. This compares with 1,431,000 pounds in May and 1,415,000 pounds in April.

HARVESTER STOCK DISPLAYS ACTIVITY

Advances in the Hope Government Will Dissolve Trust as It Did Standard Oil.

By THOMAS C. SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Grain and cotton went lower today and no changes of importance were recorded in the stock market. Good news kept piling up regarding crops and the business outlook. The bank statement showed a gain in surplus reserves of $13,084,500 in the average statement and of $8,450,250 in the actual statement of business at the end of Friday. There was an actual decrease in loans of $13,144,000, an average reduction of $26,429,000.

The banks are in strong position to handle anything that may come in the way of business or speculation. Money is extremely cheap, being offered over the end of the year for 4½ per cent on ordinary stock exchange collateral. Wall street is getting over its scare about British consols and it does not believe that war will be declared between Germany and England for a week or two at least.

About the only stocks to display much vitality today were Harvester on the exchange and United Cigars Stores on the curb. Both moved up sharply. The Harvester Company is advancing partly through hope that the government will dissolve it as the Standard Oil and Tobacco companies were dissolved and on account of the immense harvest. The Cigar Stores Company moved up to a high record price for the year in expectation of an early announcement of the new financial plan. This plan is unofficially expected to include a stock dividend of 200 per cent., the 8 per cent. being paid on the entire issue, doing a business at the rate of $30,000,000 gross annually, which is 30 per cent. greater than the best it ever did in the past.

Some specialties are being picked up in preparation for movement when the market is right. Alcohol is one of these, the stock being prepared for 4 per cent. dividend to be declared early in the Autumn. Westinghouse is being accumulated in anticipation of six per cent. dividend in September. General Electric is expected to get at least 30 per cent in new stock. Pacific will take a very large stock issue to provide for double tracking the road from Winnipeg to Vancouver, as exclusively announced in this column months ago.

The market is in good technical condition in spite of the rise in the last week.

BEEF TRUST BREAK UP.

Dissolution Is Said to Have Begun by Orders from Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 20.—It is stated here that the first steps have been taken to dissolve the Beef Trust and that the 350 concerns controlled by the National Packing Company are being assigned to the Armour, Morris and Swift interests. Printed notices mailed to department managers of Armour Company notifying them that forty-six of the National subsidiaries had been assigned to Armour interests have become public.

Companies held by National are valued at approximately $50,000,000. Dissolution of this company is a step, it is understood, to prevent filing of a dissolution suit by the Federal government.

RECIPROCITY NOT DEAD.

It May Be the Big Issue in Next Canadian Parliament.

OTTAWA, July 20.—The demand for wider markets for Canada may revive the reciprocity issue, and there is reason to expect that the tariff will be the bone of party contention at the next session of Parliament.

The Borden government sustained defeat in the Saskatchewan elections, forty-six Liberals being elected to six Conservatives, with deferred elections in two constituencies yet to be held. The issue was reciprocity and the Liberals made great gains over last Fall.

Big Dividend Expected.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Distribution of a big United Cigar Stores Company, stock dividend is expected soon. It is said that S. M. Strouck, counsel, has worked out details of the financing plan with President Whelan and directors and that everything is now in shape for "melon cutting." The United Cigar Stores Company is showing gross business over the $30,000,000 mark, which means an increase of more than 20 per cent over 1911.

Ahmeek's Earnings.

The net earnings of the Ahmeek Mining Company for the first half of this year were $690,000. Copper production cost 7.44 a pound. The total production was 7,779,023 pounds.

COPPER METAL WAS MANIPULATED ONCE

Zola Used Famous "Corner" as the Feature of a Novel.

By BOERSIANER.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Some one whispered the name Secretan the other day in connection with what he was pleased to call the "copper deal." This gentleman voiced bearish sentiment on the copper stocks in its most virulent form. By the mentioning of the Frenchman he expressed the belief that copper metal is being manipulated and the suspicion that the manipulation would end disastrously after the manner of the French corner.

BOERSIANER.

The promise is far-fetched. With the extraordinary demand for steel and iron, for lead and for brass, it is entirely in order that the large inquiry for copper metal should be legitimate. In any event, it would be impossible to re-experience the Secretan collapse. Twenty-seven years ago Monsieur A. Secretan, the president of the largest copper metal company in France, bought a lot of copper. His original purchases were intended merely for his own organization, the Societe Industrielle et Commerciale Des Metaux. He made the purchases at £39 per ton.

Gradually it dawned upon M. Secretan that at this low price he could take much more for speculation. He consulted with a number of financiers who enlarged upon his idea. It was decided to organize a company to buy up all the visible stocks of copper. Secretan opened negotiations with American producers. Next he negotiated with the Rio Tinto company in which the Rothschilds are heavy stockholders. The American mine owners, with the exception of Haggin, who refused to enter the deal, were to receive for three years an average of about thirteen cents a pound, with one-half of the profits on prices realized over this amount. Eventually the Secretan syndicate secured control of 85 per cent of the world's copper output.

Vast Sums Were Invested.

In the combination was Monsieur Denfert-Rochereau, the most powerful director in the Comptoir D'Escompte, next to the Bank of France, the largest banking institution in the Republic. Denfert-Rochereau persuaded the directors of the bank to give its guarantee to a number of contracts, including the one with the Anaconda Copper Company. Additionally, a side syndicate was formed that undertook to aid the original company by making an enormous advance on copper for a period of from one to three years. In this sub-syndicate were the Rothschilds, the Credit Lyonnaise and the Banc de Paris et Despays Bas. These important factors were drawn in through the misrepresentation of Denfert-Rochereau, who subsequently got his own bank to guarantee two more contracts involving $1,500,000.

The syndicate had had a corner for about six months and the profits on the original $5,000,000 capital were over $3,000,000 when the stock was doubled. In the mean time copper was piling up. The syndicate in order to maintain prices was compelled to pay well for every pound of the metal that was offered everywhere.

Londoners and a few Germans who had been left out began to sell copper short. Within two months, however, they were mercilessly squeezed and a number of failures was the result.

By May 31, 1888, the Comptoir D'Escompte had advanced to the syndicate a total of about $30,000,000. Of this amount over one-fifth was unsecured. By the latter part of July the unsecured loans had reached $12,000,000 and by October $13,000,000. By the end of 1888 the bank had advanced to the copper manipulators $35,000,000, one-half of which was not secured.

Operations by Syndicate.

The syndicate bought, in 1888, 160,000 tons of copper and the copper output had increased 225,000 tons, while the visible supply in December, 1888, was 104,000 tons against 42,000 tons in December, 1887. Of course as soon as it became definitely known that a substantial corner in copper had been established the metal rose by leaps and bounds and actually attained a quotation of £85 12s. 6d., or over 100 per cent. higher than it had ranged at any time before. But practically the entire capital of the Comptoir was locked up in copper. Hourly it became more and more manifest that it would be impossible to keep up the price and it was realized that a drop of copper from £85 per ton to £40 per ton would carry with it not simply a loss of $15,000,000 to the Comptoir, but might possibly ruin thousands of investors in copper stocks.

The climax was dramatic. It came on March 5, 1889. Denfert-Rochereau, driven insane by worry, committed suicide. A furious run on his bank, the Comptoir D'Escompte, began. Had it not been for the Bank of France, which advanced $20,000,000 to the Comptoir, the latter had failed. But the metal dropped sheerly. Four days after the suicide it fell from £85 to £55 and by the end of March had tumbled to £39, ending at £47. Utter demoralization prevailed. Secretan fled France. Two months later, while Sarah Bernhardt was giving a performance in New York, she espied Secretan in the audience. She notified the police and the great manipulator was extradited.

With some necessary changes this copper deal forms the leading feature of Zola's great financial novel, "L'Argent."

NEW WHEAT FACTOR TO MOVE MARKET?

Foreign Political Situation May Be of Great Consequence Here.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, July 20.—A new factor and one that may prove a bullish help has entered the wheat market, and it is attracting a great deal of attention. The political situation abroad is referred to. While the powers are not likely to sit idly by and see the Dardanelles closed to vessels carrying breadstuffs from Russia and the Danube to importing countries, the fact that shipments may be interfered with has set the entire grain world on keen edge. This was thoroughly demonstrated not only in the markets of the old world Friday, but at Chicago there was a great rush by shorts to cover and in many instances investors were good buyers and showed no disposition to wait for the soft spots on which to make their purchases.

Following the price break in wheat, the average speculator has made up his mind that a natural reaction and upturn must be expected. Sentiment may be called bullish, but with the political situation smoothed over, a change will more than likely be seen and the bears will again assume control. With the new crop moving in liberal quantities and with the markets of the country out of line as exporters, there are many things to overcome before prices may be seen to advance and hold.

The situation in corn is resting in the balance. There are many crop reports which may be called unfavorable, while there are many that claim that the plant is progressing.

The fact that Argentina is furnishing the old world with all the yellow cereal that will be wanted for a time at least, stands as a barrier between this country and the old world.

We are to have a bumper crop of oats. This grain will commence to move earlier than usual and it is being harvested and threshed in many sections.

SOCKALEXIS, STAR OF DIAMOND, RUNS FERRY

"Old Deerfoot of the Diamond" Has Lost Skill That Won Fame.

On the Penobscot River, near the village of Oldtown, Me., Sockalexis, one time the pride of all baseball dom, is running a little ferry.

The writer found him there, straining his eyes in the light of a full moon to read the account of a big league game in which Chief Meyers had starred. He is not Sockalexis the steel thewed; his step is not firm, though there is still that hint of steel spring muscles that gave him once the name of "Deerfoot of the Diamond."

Sockalexis, thirteen years ago, was a magic name, and the history of the great Cleveland player was common knowledge, but so quickly does the fame pass that to-day is is seldom spoken among ball players or patrons of the game.

It was at Houlton Academy that Louis Sockalexis first made a name in baseball. It was because he had gone there to school and had become so engrossed in the sport of the white men that his father, chief of the Wapnaki, journeyed in a canoe from the island of Oldtown down the Penobscot to the sea, along the Atlantic coast to Florida, and on the return trip visited President Cleveland to procure the papers which should make his son Louis chief of the tribe.

This was the last desperate step of the elder Sockalexis to bind his son to the red men, to make the call of the woods stronger than the call of the diamond, with the cheering bleachers.

Off to College.

When the father returned from his unequalled journey he found that young Sockalexis had already departed. The love of the game had been too strong. The boy had gone away to Holy Cross, where he was hailed as an addition to the baseball team.

At Holy Cross College young Sockalexis was a sensation. From his first game against the Springfield Eastern League team, in which he made three two-baggers off the delivery of "Jimmy" Callahan, now manager of the Chicago White Sox and at that time a great pitcher, his career was a series of brilliant performances. His batting was wonderful, his fielding marvelous, and his great speed enabled him to steal bases at will. In one game against Brown University's greatest team, on April 19, 1895, he drove out two home runs and two doubles and purloined six bases.

Worcester went mad about him, and immense crowds flocked to the little field on Mount St. James to see him perform.

He played in a time when college teams were truly great, in the days of "Billy" Lauder, Bustard and "Dave" Fultz, of Brown; Carter and Greenway, of Yale, "Doc" White and Bach, of Georgetown, Powers, Curley, Fox, McTigue and Pappalau, of Holy Cross, and Highlands and Scannel, of Harvard, and even then experts universally proclaimed him the greatest college ball player of all time.

Sockalexis was likewise brilliant in all lines of sport, especially in track athletics, where he ran all distances with equal facility. "Tommy" Conneff, the world's champion mile runner, was a student at Holy Cross in those days and often was hard pressed for his honors by the swift footed Indian. In competition the young redskin ran the "hundred" in ten seconds flat, and "Bernie" Wefers then in his prime, declared that Sockalexis would surpass him if he gave his time to the sport. But Sockalexis loved baseball too well to care much about other pastimes.

His work had already attracted major league attention when, in 1897, he followed a beloved friend, Powers, to Notre Dame. He was there but a short time before the Cleveland National League Club signed him. His career in the big league was meteoric. For a time he was more brilliant than he had been at college, his propensities for batting out home runs especially bringing him quick fame.

Tribesmen Were There.

No fan who witnessed his debut in New York in 1897 will ever forget it. Sockalexis came here heralded as great, but the big city, as usual, was sceptical until it had seen. Tall, broad shouldered, lithe limbed, dark, clear eyed and handsome, he strode to the home plate of the Polo Ground for the first time, a perfect specimen of his stock, the Algonquin, the truest type of the American Indian. He struck the plate with his bat and crouched. Amos Rusie, then in his prime, opposed him. Rusie wound up and uncoiled. The mingled roar of "Injun—Big Chief" and other similar cries of intended derision was silenced like magic by a resounding report. The ball, like a bullet, soared high and far to the wall in the outfield. Then up from the crowd in the grandstand arose a curiously garbed group and a cry never before heard on a ball field, the war cry of the Wapnaki, clear and vibrant, rang to the rafters, rolled out over the field where the pride of the tribe was fleeing over the white paths, and rebounded from Coogan's Bluffs in the distance. The Oldtown Indians, even their chief, had long before become proud of Sockalexis' fame on the diamond and had come there to greet him.

That memorable home run was the forerunner of many. Sockalexis was a terrific batter and continued to grow better each game. His fielding was spectacular, his base running supreme, and an ease and grace marked his playing which rarely, if ever, has been equalled. But just when the experts were predicting that he would be the greatest of all ball players, he broke, broke dismally.

Sheriff Quinn Is Running a Farm in Jail
In Bucolic Duds, He Raises Corn and Spuds

IS QUINN A FARMER? WELL, LOOK AT THESE PICTURES!

There Is Corn in That Jail Yard Which Looks Down on Its "Father," and It's Young Yet.

SING a song of garden "sass" by the county jail;
Picture Farmer-Sheriff Quinn in bucolic duds,
Chasing worms from off the earth, bugs from off his spuds,
Making mollicoddles of his cabbages and kale.
SING a song of garden "sass," all the fun it means
Little garden spotlet is the joy of Honest John,
Nix on all your millionaires, they have nothing on Sheriff Quinn for happiness with his corn and beans.

WITH the help of his mocking birds "Honest John" Quinn, sheriff of Suffolk County, and thereby keeper of Charles street jail, is also keeper of a garden in the jail yard.

The sheriff does the gardening, of course, but the mocking birds, which sing and swing in their gilded cages in the sheriff's house, are very important.

They wake the sheriff up in the morning early, so he can get on the gardening job.

This is the first garden ever operated in the jail yard. Preceding sheriffs were not gardeners. Or, if they were, they gardened out in the country somewhere. It never occurred to them to do a little intensive farming right inside the yard walls.

But "Honest John" is getting to be a born farmer, so to speak. Time was when he thought peas and corn and such grew in cans. Now he knows all about em.

Fun in Cutting Living Cost.

The sheriff gets a heap of fun out of his garden, also vegetables. He is learning much about Nature that he didn't know till this Summer and he is learning something about reducing the high cost of living by means of raising your own garden truck.

Why should the sheriff desire to reduce the high cost of his living. He is a single man. He has a good job.

Ssh!

He is a candidate for re-election, or rather for election to the office to which he was appointed by Governor Foss to fill out the unexpired term of the late Sheriff Fred Seavey. It's a five-year term, and the sheriff's friends can't see any reason on earth why he shouldn't stay right where he is.

But there's a lot of talk being made just now about bachelors in office who should be married and making some fine girl a good husband.

Witness what Governor Foss recently said to "Dave" Walsh and "Joe" Pelletier. And how Walsh came through—a couple of days later with the announcement that his hat is in the matrimonial ring.

Leap Year, You Know.

Mind you, this isn't saying that the sheriff is thinking of marriage. But lots of married men find that a truck patch is a handy thing to have about the house. Helps keep down the store bill. Eh, what?

But if Sheriff Quinn wants to get married, that's his business; there's no need to get impertinent about it. Of course, if one wanted to say anything but one won't.

(Leap year, too.)

Corn and beans does the sheriff raise. And beets and potatoes. And tomatoes and squash and now and then a weed or two and such worms and bugs as escape his vigilant eyes.

The corn is the Sheriff's fair-haired vegetable child. It is taller than father. It reaches most to the top of the high jail wall. By and by it will be tall enough to peek over the wall and make eyes at Brother Charles River, of the well known family of that name, who is always strolling by.

The Sheriff is just as proud of his garden as any man that ever made truck grow where none grew before. He shows it to jail visitors—except those sent by the judges.

STOREKEEPERS' OUTING.

Hyde Park Merchants to Take a Day Off Wednesday.

The storekeepers of Hyde Park will not open on Wednesday, for on that day they will hike to Bass Point, Nahant, where the Business Men's Association will hold their eleventh annual outing. Special cars will leave Cleary square, Hyde Park, at 8 o'clock for Otis wharf, where steamers will be boarded for Nahant. The committee has arranged sports and a ball game between the business men of Everett square, captained by Charles Evans, and Cleary square, headed by Michael J. Carroll. The committee is John Johnston, chairman; I. A. Bissell, Robert Gray, John O'Connell, Fred W. Boynton, W. G. Lugten, F. J. Thompson, E. H. Taylor, Albert Davenport, Charles F. Morrison, Dr. C. E. Bryant, John H. Wetherbee, E. W. Flagg, W. G. Nunn and Dr. F. B. Stevens.

Loss Teaches How to Win.

By HERBERT KAUFMAN.

(Copyright, 1912, by Herbert Kaufman)

An empty pocket is merely an annoyance—empty hearts and empty brains make bankrupts.

It's bad enough that you've lost your savings. Don't lose your head in the bargain—you need it today more than ever.

There comes a time in every man's life when he must be a good actor. Play your part

Feel as badly as you please, but hide the truth—smile to all creation even if you do sob alone

You're precisely the same individual that you were in prosperity—your earning capacity hasn't altered—your tank of enthusiasm will still hold as much optimism as you can generate and your mind hasn't shrunk one particle.

Your hands slipped—but there are a thousand new holds in sight

Try again. Defeat is the best school for victory. Loss teaches how to win. Slips are reminders against carelessness. Until you have stepped on a banana peel you don't appreciate the necessity for watchfulness.

Anyhow, you were possibly on the wrong track—you probably accepted the first opening you met, and finding conditions rather easy you followed the line of least resistance. Why, you might have made twice as much of yourself if you had been less complacent in the beginning.

Your present situation isn't deplorable unless you over-estimate its gravity.

BUT, if the failure of one plan has opened your eyes to the astounding number of possibilities that face every competent and reliable human—if you can see how many fields are inadequately developed—if you can force your resolution into zeal—if the cold shoulders of warm friends have angered you to self-pledges of success—if lack of sympathy and humiliating sneers have reached the well springs of your pride—then you have gained in strength what you lost in money—a brighter tomorrow is in the offing—your real career is near.

Take the gaff with a grin, not with a grimace.

Don't surrender—the fight is still on. Don't reduce your terms to match your circumstances—aim higher than ever.

The man who can laugh at adversity can laugh for the universe—we need him everywhere and always.

There's skill enough, but not will enough for the world's work.

Souls that survive discouragement, like vessels that weather the storms, are never left idle in the docks.

You're run down, but you'll wind up at the top if you'll climb for it.

Rip the mourning band from your faith and wreathe your face with cheer.

Look undaunted—even if we do suspect the wound below the grin we'll love you all the more for the mask.

Don't sell at your belly need—necessity is a coward and a liar—she exaggerates the worst.

Get the price you're worth. If the first bargaining runs against you, disregard the advice of privation and refuse the deal.

The patient merchant eventually finds a profitable purchaser. There's more than one buyer in every market.

The Third Week of the Pre-Inventory Sale opens auspiciously.
How could it well be otherwise? The goods are here, the prices are down, and you are getting to know it. Merchandise here cheaper than ever known. Raw material and in many instances labor higher than for years. The paradox cannot last. : : :

Shepard Norwel Company

WINTER STREET TEMPLE PLACE TREMONT STREET

The outlet we have made for our goods by the Pre-Inventory Sale has led some importers and manufacturers who were overstocked to offer us their products on terms that we couldn't well afford to decline. That accounts for offerings that do not represent our own surpluses. We never stop buying—especially when markets favor you.

REMARK:

There is science in distribution. At the reduced prices quoted for the third and last week of our Pre-Inventory Sale, we could sell much of the merchandise in bulk to dealers, thereby avoiding the details and expenses of retail sales. But we wish to place the goods in as many homes as possible. There is great advertising value in that plan. What we lose in profit and cost we make up in other things—winning your good will, receiving words of appreciation from disinterested sources exert a trade influence far greater than we pay for them in the currency of merchandise values. This week's offerings and your faith in our statements should tax the facilities of the Store.

WAIST-WISE WOMEN

GOVERNOR-EDITOR ROBERT P. BASS ON THE PROGRESSIVE RED SOX

WHEN I am asked to "comment on baseball" I envy the popular Governor of Maine. I haven't played baseball since I was a lad of seventeen—and I didn't play it enough then to get myself talked about in Sporting Lan[illegible] The only ball nine I was ever a member of was called the Hardly Ables and there was only one nine in the town of Peterborough we could even come near to beating. I forget the real name of that aggregation [illegible] that the town called them the Barely Ables.

We never should have won a game at all if it were not for Walter Snow. Walter is an actor now. He was then, for [illegible] matter, but now he is a regular actor, with a stage name and a pr[illegible] He [illegible] Cunningham Pond. Walter was the coacher for our team. He coached [illegible] we were in the field as well as when we were at bat. And he [illegible] [illegible] the runner to get to first base. I was first base for the Hardly Ables and Walter Snow's success as a jollier frequently gave me time t[illegible]

[illegible] Sox won and I want them to keep on winning. The Red Sox strike me as emphatically and decidedly a progressive ball team. And besides that, I'm for New England.—By GOVERNOR ROBERT P. BASS OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

WHITE SOX VANQUISHED IN LAST INNING OF THE FINAL BATTLE OF SERIES

REMARKABLE PANORAMA SHOWING HOW THE RED SOX SAVED YESTERDAY'S GAME BY GARDNER'S QUICK PLAY AND THROW TO THE PLATE IN THE FIFTH INNING—CHARLEY HALL, THE VICTOR

[illegible] play was "caught" at the most critical point in the game. With one out in the fifth, Rath walked and Callahan's triple scored him with the tying run. Hall then passed Lord and Collins, filling the bases, with only one out. Bodie [illegible] Larry Gardner [illegible] Callahan, and the next man went out [illegible] four Chicago men running. Former Mighty English Lightweight Is Disqualified in Ninth by Referee Eyton.

Bill Carrigan's Single Scores Duffy Lewis in the Ninth Inning of a Memorable Struggle at Fenway Park—Red Sox Take Four Out of Five from the White Sox—Both Teams Play Superb Baseball

BILL CARRIGAN singled in the ninth, Duffy Lewis scored a run, that broke up a tie of four innings' duration. Boston had taken the [illegible] game of the series and mad[illegible] White Sox [illegible] chalked [illegible] Red Sox were a step nearer the flag, and joy reigned su[illegible] 24,000 fan[illegible]

Bill strolled up to the plate in that final session, scheduled to be the [illegible] Callahan. Now most of [illegible] managers know that it is a decidedly perilous stunt [illegible] of the Lewiston cigar salesman. Ed Walsh protested [illegible] finally gave in to his manager's directions. How the Great Game Was Won.

It happened thus. In the ninth with the count two all, Duffy Lewis opened with a safe biff to centre. A passed ball saw him perched on second, from whence he advanced a peg when Larry Gardner committed suicide. Then was held a consultation of Messrs. Callahan, Lord, Walsh et al.

Just what the decision of this meeting was came to light when the Meridian Apollo purposely passed Stahl and Wagner. It was quite evident that "come-back" Jimmy thought that Walsh could make Carrigan hit the ball into the dirt and play the short end in an easy do[illegible]

When the catcher came up a wild yell from countless [illegible] encouraged him to do his best. With all the godlike majesty o[illegible] holding up a taxi, Bill waved his mighty bludgeon [illegible] spacre. A crash—and all the incidents mentioned in the [illegible]

HALL HOLDS WHITE SOX TO TWO RUNS

"Sea Lion," Aided by Superb Team Work, Beats "Big Ed" Walsh.

With the club, the Red Sox divided things up pretty well, the seven safe swats being divided among as many players. For the Chicagos [illegible] each contributed a pair of safeties, the odd one, which was a triple and scored a run, falling to the lot of Callahan himself.

Hall started off [illegible] after records, by fanning Rath and Callahan. Lord shattered visions of a no-hit contest, by punching a solid seam to left centre, only to die a moment afterwards, in a vain attempt to outfoot Carrigan's sharp peg to second.

Right After Walsh.

The Aspirants wasted no time in showing that they meant business and almost before Walsh realized that the game had started, a run had been [illegible]. Hooper [illegible] Rath [illegible] Yerkes [illegible] the first [illegible] the afternoon when he [illegible] two-sacker [illegible] centre. Speaker [illegible] with a [illegible] over second [illegible] registered. Lewis caught one on the nose but it sped directly into Callahan's clutches [illegible] Rath pegged [illegible] her.

Bodie [illegible] the second when after [illegible] had [illegible] to Lewis he pinned [illegible] against the left centre [illegible]. McIntyre waited and walked, and a rally looked imminent but Hall let out a notch, fanned Weaver and forced Sullivan to roll one to Gardner.

Manager Stahl ripped the lid off in glorious fashion in the latter half with his homer. The ovation Jake received lasted for five minutes. Satisfied for the time, Wagner fouled to Sullivan. Carrigan grounded to Weaver, and Hall gave Bodie a short chase after his boost.

Hall still [illegible] in the third though he did pass a man. Walsh lifted to "Spoke." Rath strolled, "Come Back" James turned in his second strikeout and Lord gave Hooper a chance [illegible] make a nifty running catch of his [illegible]. Boston's part was likewise short and sweet, Hooper fanning, Yerkes [illegible] to Rath, and "Spoke" grounding to the same individual.

Then the White Sox Scored.

The visitors shoved their first count across in the fourth. After Collins lofty one had dropped into Speaker's capacious maw, "Ping" Bodie launched his second two-baser out against Duffy Lewis' mountain. Then McIntyre shot one over second and the Pacific Coast fence breaker hurried in. Weaver and Sullivan were helpless victims of Hall's shoots. The Boston side was a blank though Stahl and Wagner strolled after two were [illegible] watch Carrigan pop [illegible].

Things were tied up in the fifth. Walsh started by striking out and the fans settled back [illegible] ened when Rath drew a gift and scored on Callahan's [illegible] centre. Then Hall [illegible] spirit and walked Lord and Collins, using the corners.

Gardner's Great Play.

Bodie [illegible] the pitch [illegible] Gardner dusted over, grabbed it and buried to Carrigan, just in time to shut off Callahan. It was a lightning play and deserved to draw a great cheer. Then McIntire [illegible] and the throng breathed easier. Boston's half was fruitless, Hall, Hooper and Yerkes passing out on easy chances.

The White Sox sixth was likewise three in a row but when Speaker opened for [illegible] Boston [illegible] But Lewis put the clamps on Boston's hopes by sending "Spoke" out Weaver to Lord, and then going down on an attempt to pilfer [illegible].

[illegible] fast [illegible] baseman trotted [illegible] with [illegible]. He made [illegible] ping Wagner taking Hall's throw with [illegible] and blocking the bag in great style. Harry [illegible] triple [illegible] out.

How It Finished.

[illegible] down on the Boston end Wagner [illegible] down at [illegible] though McIntyre did manage to convert one of Hall's offerings into a single.

Duffy Lewis initiated the final scene with a nice running catch off Walsh. Rath drew his third walk, only to die stealing [illegible] popped to Wagner.

Then the "Champs-to-be" came to time and rested a peg nearer the final goal by the methods before mentioned.

'Ping' Bodie Strikes Out Again; Fined $25

"Ping" Bodie's temper cost him $25 at Fenway Park yesterday afternoon.

Bodie thinks he is the greatest long [illegible] in the American League [illegible] the fence buster. [illegible] Which cost Bodie [illegible] $25.

"Ping" came to Boston and found he was up against it when he faced the Red Sox pitching corps. When he tried to "bust" a fence he usually cut a wide swath in the air.

At first Bodie quarrelled with the umpire. Then the crowd "kidded" him. The greater the "kidding" and "boo-ing" the wilder Bodie swung.

He grew so wild that he struck out five times Friday and died three times on tiny taps that went no farther than the infield. The crowd "boo-ed" him and later on Jimmy Callahan, his boss, called [illegible] to account. He became so rattled [illegible] he dropped [illegible] easy fly in the out[field] and Callahan was so sore that he [illegible] spiked one.

Yesterday Bodie, smarting under the fans' "kidding" and his boss' threats, became savage. He "connected" twice and tied out two two-baggers. In the [illegible] he was still swinging hoping to [hit] the ball again. He swung so wild [that he] struck out. Then Callahan levied [the] $25 tax on Bodie.

FAHEY SIGNS WITH MACK.

Medford Lad Will Join the World's Champion Team.

Howard S. Fahey, captain of the Medford High baseball team which won the Suburban League pennant in 1909 and last season third baseman on the Dartmouth College nine, has signed with the Philadelphia Athletics. He will return to Dartmouth at the close of the season, but will be barred from taking further part in the athletic events of that college. He is a brother to Pitcher Joseph Fahey of last season's Medford team.

Last of the Famous Delehanty Brothers Released by Tigers

"Jim," Former Slugger, Unable to Keep Up Pace and Is Let go by Jennings.

DETROIT, July 20.—Jim Delehanty, the Detroit infielder and outfielder, has been released by Manager Hughey Jennings. The release of Delehanty marks the passing out of the big leagues of the last member of the famous Delehanty brothers, all of whom were wonderful diamond stars.

Delehanty was considered one of the [best] players in the American League when [he] was traded to Detroit by Washington several years ago. At the time he was an infielder and covered second base for the Tigers.

"Del," like his brother Ed, who is now dead, was a great hitter, his timely wallops for extra bases winning many a game for Jennings' crew when the Tigers were fighting for the pennant in the American League. Delehanty slowed up this season and has been playing the outfield. Jennings is planning several more changes in his club.

Giants Taught Grif's Kids to Take Chances

WASHINGTON, July 20.—Speaking of opportunities, Clarke Griffith made the remark that one of the best things which happened to the Washingtons was to play two exhibitions with the Giants this spring.

Some of the young fellows on my team ever had seen a demonstration of taking extra bases every time an opportunity offered," said "Grif," "and after they had watched the Giants they began to talk about it and figured that they could do the same thing if they kept their eyes open.

"Well, they're doing it now and that's one reason why we are not losing the close games, as Washington was wont to lose them in the past."

Something in that, for Milan won for Washington the other day in New York [becau]se he had the nerve to try to score [fro]m first on a hit to right field. [It i]s true that he was helped by an error, [but] the very daring of the play hurried the play so that the error was made.

Snodgrass Is Putting Up Great Giant Game

NEW YORK, July 20.—Snodgrass is doing some very neat, clean and nifty fielding of ground balls out of his territory. If any opposing player makes an extra base on Snodgrass he is indeed a lucky man.

Those who are not close observers of the Giants' games of late fail to appreciate how many opposing runs have been sidetracked by Snodgrass' clean fielding of safe hits.

One has only to take due notice of the outfielding of other teams to become aware why it is the Giants make so many more runs than their opponents on an equal number of safe hits.

The fielding of grounders in the outfield is very seldom spectacular, but the results obtained by correct and proper playing of the rolling ball is far beyond general appreciation.

Plenty of Browns in the Major League Now

Don't walk carelessly. You might step on a young pitcher. Two more of the ambitious ones are in the harbor—Brown and Davis.

Brown seems to be a pitching name of late. A few years ago there was a catcher named Brown, a first-bagger of the same name, an outfielder, Tom Brown, and another one, George Browne. Now all the Browns are pitchers.

Chicago has one, the St. Louis Browns have two Browns, the Athletics have one, and the Reds have hired one also.

If the Red Brown can prove better than the Brown Browns, and equal to the Cub Brown—aw, come away, sunstroke is impending!

Barberich Released.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 20.—President Van Dusen stated that Pitcher Frank Barberich, who was signed about a month ago, had been given his unconditional release, and that Eddie Summers, secured from Detroit last week, would report soon.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20.—Today's game between Washington and St. Louis was called at the end of the eleventh with the score 3 to 3. St. Louis tied it in the ninth when, with two out Hughes gave two bases on balls and Shotten singled. Johnson then went in and stopped things. Allison finished and St. Louis did great work. YANKEES WIN BOTH GAMES FROM CLEVELAND

NEW YORK, July 20.—The Yankees took two games from Cleveland today principally through daring base running behind good pitching. The first game resulted 4 to 3 and the second 4 to 0. The first was won in the last half of the ninth, when Caldwell who ran for Simmons, stole home, to be followed a moment later by Maloney, who scored on a single by Chase. Caldwell allowed but three scattered hits in the second game and the Yankees stole nine bases.

Double Umpire System Failure in Southern

Jack O'Toole and Theodore Breitenstein, two Southern League umpires, have been dropped from the staff by the league president.

At the start of the present season President Kavanaugh introduced the double umpiring system in the Southern association for the first time.

As to the umpiring, it worked fine, but the lack of attendance in many of the cities and the many postponed games made it impossible to pay eight arbitrators.

Breitenstein will probably join the pitching staff of the New Orleans team, while O'Toole will have to look elsewhere for a job as index handler.

GIANTS TRIUMPH IN A 9TH INNING RALLY

Two Runs Helped Along by Pinch Hitters, Just Wipe Out Pirates' Lead.

PITTSBURG, July 20.—New York won out in the ninth inning in a remarkable finish today, making four hits, two of them by pinch hitters. Robinson pitched a grand game until the ninth, holding the Giants to three hits, but Fletcher, the first man up in the ninth, singled to right. Shafer, batting for Tesreau, beat out a bunt. Snodgrass sacrificed and Doyle sent both runners home with a single. Pittsburg's only run was scored on Mensor's walk and hits by Wilson and Miller. Score:

Dooin Must Give Up Outside Positions

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.—President Fogel of the Phillies, who is here with his team, said today that he will insist on Manager Dooin throwing up all his outside interests next winter and devoting all his time to the Philadelphia ball club.

Dooin has been in vaudeville for a couple of winters and has been quite a success. He is also interested with his father-in-law in a prosperous shoe business.

Fogel says these things will have to be cut out if Charley expects to continue as manager of the Quakers, declaring that a manager has no time for outside engagements if he is engaged in building up a winning ball club.

Jersey City May Lose Its Baseball Team

NEW YORK, July 20.—It is rumored around baseball circles that the Jersey City ball team in the International League would not play in Jersey City next year on account of the poor attendance on their home grounds.

The rumor could not be verified as several of the club's owners were out of town. When the season opened Jersey City started out with a dash. They took a slump and are now in fifth place, playing in and out ball. When the team started downward in the pennant race only a handful of fans attended the home games.

Rest for Kilbane.

CLEVELAND, O., July 20.—Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, will fight no more until September. Manager Dunn said the champion will not fight in hot weather, but that Gibson has promised him a date in September. Kilbane may go West again and seek a match with Joe Rivers.

KEATING, LAWRENCE BOY WONDER, BEATEN BY LYNN TEAM, 6--2

The second clash went eleven innings and was a battle between Fullerton and Britton. Lawrence won out in the eleventh on a hit by Breymaier and Briggs, followed by Kennedy's double. Double plays featured the second game. Chase's fielding excelled.

Men Who Endure

Are Usually Wearers of an O-P-C

The O-P-C suspensory is being worn by countless men today.

The man who doesn't wear it suffers needless strain.

He is wasting nerve force which might be used to multiply capacity.

To men who walk much an O-P-C is an essential. Golfers and athletes nearly all wear it.

But every man needs it to keep at his best, whatever the work he does.

Try it a week. Note what it means to end this nervous drain. After that you'll never go without it.

We guarantee results.

The O-P-C is the scientific suspensory, famous for 20 years. Our book will tell you why you need it—what it does. Write for it.

All druggists guarantee you satisfaction with an O-P-C. No. 2, Lisle, 75c—No. 3, Silk, $1.00. Mailed direct from 45 W. Twenty-Fifth Street, Chicago, if your druggist will not supply you.

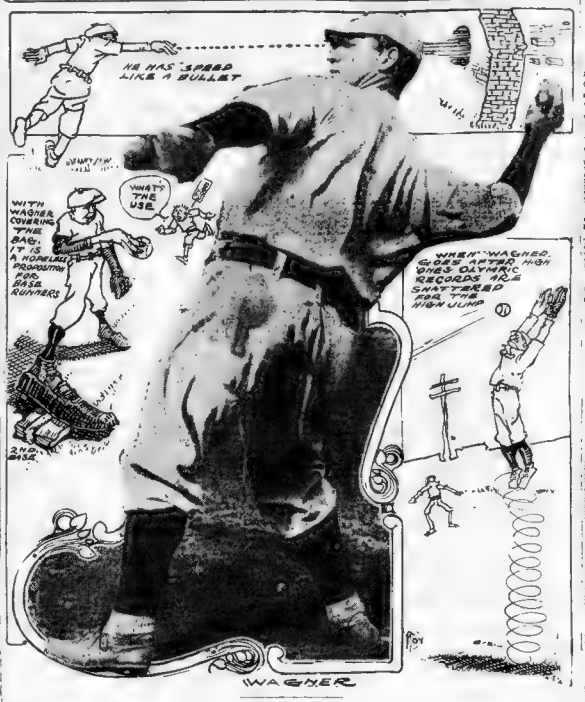
WAGNER REAL PIVOT OF SOX LEADERS

CAPTAIN SHOWS WAY IN GREAT FLAG RAC

HEINIE WAGNER, CAPTAIN AND REAL FIELD LEADER OF THE RED SOX TEAM



"Henie's" Arm Is in Shape Again and the Red Sox Revolve Around the Great, Quick-Witted Shortstop.

"If 'Heinie' Wagner's arm comes back into shape we will have a baseball team worth talking about Wagner is the only problem. If he's Wagner we may beat 'em all; if he isn't, I don't know just what we'll do."

President McAleer of the Red Sox made this comment before the Red Sox started on their Spring training trip this year. Then he observed:

"This Wagner fellow is a wonder. Last fall he was discouraged. His arm went bad and he was afraid it would never 'come back' I met him in the Fall, told him to take it easy, forget about his troubles and work himself gradually into shape I told him we'd stick by him until he was his old self again. Now, we'll wait and see how it comes out."

Wagner's arm did "come back"; it is better every day of his life, and around "Heinie" Wagner now revolves a team that has "beaten everything" in the American league and looks like it might wear well the title of world's champions this Fall

WAGNER PIVOT OF RED SOX TEAM

Wagner is the pivot of the Red Sox leaders He is the key of the infield and, without a stonewall infield, or something like one, the Red Sox could never have approached first place. There is no doubt that Wagner is, far and away, the best shortstop in the American League.

The Red Sox have had the best outfield in the league—probably the best in the world—for a long time. Last year the pitchers did not work up to championship form and the infield was a patchwork all season. Wagner's arm went bad and he had to play second base, when he played at all.

A second division team resulted This year the pitchers are "going good." Wagner is himself again and the infield—with Jake Stahl back in harness—finishes the championship baseball outfit

Wagner is the man who adds to the team just what was needed to win the pennant. His return to form has given the other infielders confidence. They are the ballast, he is the driving power

Shortstop is the hardest place to play on the diamond. Wagner is here, there, everywhere. Draw a line just back of the pitcher's box straight to the first-second base line, then carry it over around second out into centre field about seventy-five feet, then across the outfield to a point outside the left foul line, then in and around the position occupied by Larry Gardner, and you have Wagner's territory

CLEAN AND SURE PLAYER.

Any fly ball that comes into this territory will be taken, of a surety, by "Heinie" Wagner, except when "Heinie" is drawn out of position, or when it happens to be in Speaker's own pet preserve

He is death to fly balls and is particularly strong for those nifty little Texas leaguers that usually drop back of the infield before anybody can get under them unless it be "Heinie."

Similarly, most ground balls that are batted into that territory are Wagner's prey. He covers all of the wide stretch between Steve Yerkes and Larry Gardner and neither Gardner or Yerkes needs move far out of his position, for Wagner trails away into their territory.

He takes the balls "clean"—that is, he gets the grounders and the bounders squarely in his two hands without the preliminary juggling that retards so many infielders. If the hits are too wide for a two-handed stop Wagner has a spectacular way of stabbing them with one hand, the bare one or the gloved one alike

Then comes the throw. Wagner does not wait to get into position. He throws from nearly any position Hits to deep shortside are likely to be safe ones unless the stop is quick and clean and the throw is like a bullet That is "Heinie's" specialty—bullet throws, and no other infielder in either league can beat him at them The ball goes with tremendous speed, in a straight line and is rarely inaccurate

JUST ONE LITTLE WEAKNESS.

Wagner now and then fumbles one or throws awkwardly when somebody runs in front of him, that is one of his few weaknesses. But all infielders have the same trouble—it is natural

Wagner covers second base for most of the throws to head off base runners When the runner starts off first "Heinie" usually waits to see if it is a "hit and run" play, and is drawn out of position less by those plays than any of the other shortstops

Otherwise he hikes for the bag He takes the catcher's throw on a run, usually in one hand; then blocks off the base completely so that the runner can't touch it

That catching is wonderful Wagner has been known to keep on running towards the bag and swing his left hand away out behind him to nail a wild throw in that direction. All of this without stopping, and another motion "puts it on" the runner

Wagner is fearless. He is one of the few who pay no attention to Ty Cobb's steam-engine, feet-foremost dives, for instance. In the Detroit series, Wagner calmly sat before the bag and waited for Cobb to slide in Ty was out

Heinie" has evolved a play that gets the runners off second, even when they take short leads. He and Joe Wood are particularly successful with the play.

QUICK THINKER AND SURE HITTER.

This is "Heinie" Wagner in the field At bat he does not hit in the .300 class, but he is a very timely swatter and advances base runners more frequently than his average would indicate

He is sure at the "hit and run" game, connecting even when he has to fling his club at the ball to stop a "pitch-out."

Catchers frequently think they detect the "hit and run" signal, whereupon they order the pitcher to throw wide, so as to fool the batter and catch the base runner Wagner reaches for these and hits them

On the bases he is speedy and alive to advance himself and the others. He is daring and nimble-footed

But, above all, it is Wagner's "baseball brains" that count. He is one of the quickest thinkers in the game, taking advantages of opportunities that other, and slower wits, would not comprehend until it is too late.

In the recent New York series, for instance, Wagner scrambled up from a slide and reached home on a throw that went but ten feet past Third Baseman Hartsell. The play won the game

Wagner is always alert. He captains the Red Sox and it is his wits that figure in the field plays that frequently set the "fans" on their feet with a hurrah.

When you Buy Tobacco, what ELSE do you Pay for?

Of course you know that the price you paid for your tobacco is ABOVE the real COST of that tobacco.

But did you ever stop to think that the cost (on which you must pay a fair profit) is not based on the value of the tobacco itself, but on its value PLUS the cost of the package?

And when you pay for fancy tins and tinfoil wrappings, you either pay MORE for your smoke, or you get LESS quality in your tobacco.

That is why so many smokers stick to the old-fashioned "plug," paying ONLY for a good smoke or chew instead of a pretty package.

Besides this, these smokers get fresher, finer flavored, cooler tobacco, because NO artificial packing can keep the natural flavor as well as the older method of PRESSING the moisture into the tobacco and HOLDING it there by nature's own protection—the natural leaf wrapper.

You can prove this easily to your own satisfaction, because every tobacco store sells

THE LITTLE THINGS COUNT.

A Few Valuable Pointers on the Care of Automobile Tires

Pneumatic tires are constructed to give service. Experts with a superior knowledge of the tire building game, are continually experimenting to give the best to the automobile owner. Pneumatic tires will give service if given the proper attention.

[illegible] scratches the tread [illegible] and instantly a fault is found, careful investigation should be made to ascertain the cause [illegible] says R. J. Cox of the Goodyear [illegible] Company. Immediate [illegible] should be taken and the tire, instead of developing [illegible] case of trouble [illegible] stand a chance of running a mileage [illegible] [illegible] otherwise possible.

Under [illegible] proper [illegible] attention will easily [illegible] them. Road conditions also play [illegible] portant part in the life of tires [illegible] bruises and cuts are ruinous to automobile tires. Take the trouble [illegible] game [illegible] and fix the cut [illegible] perhaps the unexpected blowout will be avoided.

Outside these common faults there are others, none the less important [illegible] [illegible] life and strength of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Nurse your tires and give them [illegible]

The [illegible] has entered [illegible] events during the [illegible] for which the car is eligible, including 25, 50, 75 and 100-mile events. He will also try to lower the mile record for the Galveston Beach, held by Zengle with a National in 37 8.

The car which Whalen is to mount is now owned by Fred Cummiskey, a wealthy amateur sportsman in New York. In addition to this the driver is negotiating for a fast 300-inch [illegible] car and one other, and expects to arrive in Galveston with no less than three racing machines.

GREAT ADVANCE IN SOLID TIRES

[illegible] Manufacturers Increase [illegible] Guarantee on Solid [illegible]

[illegible] history of the motor [illegible] such marked [illegible] as those [illegible] the past year.

Demountable solid tires for use on motor trucks likewise have had the effect of [illegible] tire service. They have [illegible] to be entirely practical and [illegible] the delays and inconvenience [illegible] from the use of pressure [illegible]

[illegible] solid tire situation [illegible] Phillips of the [illegible] Company says:

This [illegible] is an innovation."

Sees Its Biggest Plant.

The American Motors Company of Indianapolis, makers of the "American Underslung" cars, have just completed a [illegible] brick and steel addition to [illegible] No. 2. This increase in factory [illegible] has been caused by the demand for the underslung type manufactured by them. It was found [illegible] the beginning of the season of 1912 [illegible] practically double factory [illegible] just before the 1913 [illegible] [illegible] made [illegible] completed and the foundation laid for further increase in factory space. The new building, which is now completed, is one of the handsomest and best lighted factory buildings in the city.

What You Will See at California's Great Exposition

A Panoramic View of a Part of the Panama-Pacific Exposition to Be Held at San Francisco. The Rich Coloring of the Wonderfully Beautiful Surroundings Are Shown in This Sketch.

By John Brisben Walker.

THE Exposition of 1915 to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal will be the great university in which the students of the world will take their post-graduate courses.

The Exposition itself will be a comprehensive exhibit of all that man has done that is most interesting, most novel, most useful and most important. No matter in what you may be most interested, whether in live stock or radium, in education or in road-making, in eugenics or in shipbuilding, in textile fabrics or in athletics; no matter what the subject, here you can find all that is latest and of most value.

And this first Exposition ever held on the shores of an ocean is being built in a city that has no like. No environment the world over can offer the visitor so many attractions of such varied character, amid such superb environment in such perfect climate, whether in January or July. It is as if nature had designed it from all time for an exposition ground.

It is a land of open fires in July, when humanity elsewhere is sweltering. Because the doors of the Exposition will be open from February to November, you can take your choice of months for your trip. You can travel across the continent in comfortably heated cars in February, and, leaving the crest if the Sierras deep in snow, drop down within three hours through nature's greatest transformation scene, first to green grass peeping out from under the snow, then blossoming fruit trees, and presently to waving palms and flowering shrubs.

But begin putting money in bank now specially for this trip, for it will require somewhere from $200 to $500, according to where you live and your rate of expenditure.

Let us suppose you have arrived in the early morning in February at the snow-clad crests of the Sierras—have left behind you the chilling winds and bitter cold of Winter. Then in three hours you will have dropped down into the flower-perfumed air of the Pacific coast—have sailed across what is perhaps the largest and most beautiful bay on the globe and have set foot in the superb city so marvellously rebuilt from its ashes.

As you crossed the bay you beheld a spectacle never before witnessed on the American continent. A foreign dignitary was being received by the Exposition. He was being taken from the city to the Exposition grounds by water. In a modern yacht? Nothing so commonplace! A hundred and fifty great oars were flashing in the sunlight. The galley of the Emperor Tiberius, which had been found after 2,000 years sunk in an Italian lake, had been reconstructed for the Panama-Pacific Exposition. You have on the waters of the bay the contrast of the greatest battleships of the world, Europe's eight hundred-foot luxurious steamships and the most magnificent yacht of "the glory which was Rome's" side by side—in front of the Exposition doors.

The oars flash in the sunlight, moved by the rhythmic impulse of three hundred arms. The distinguished party of visitors stands under a silken canopy, reached by thirty marble stairs from the deck of the galley beneath them.

In its architectural features the Exposition of 1915 will be unique. It is to be suggestive of what the city of the future will be—not a mass of incongruous buildings, big and little—not even streets of superb detached edifices; but great courts of magnificent architecture on every side, a perfection of form and color.

The world will find here a perfect harmony of architecture and landscape gardening carried out for the first time in history. The streets both of Athens and of Rome were detached structures erected by the tastes of different men and differing periods. But the greatest architects, under one master mind, are here combining perfect contours with the tints of artistically blending colors.

The greatest movement ever instituted in the direction of world organization and of world peace, of world progress, will find its inception at the Universal Exposition of 1915. To this first Congress of the Confederated Nations of the World are to be brought one hundred men of highest intellectual rank, of broadest grasp of the world's problems, of known earnestness in behalf of peace and all that is essential to the progress of the world. They will come to sit for months in session upon the most important of world problems, and the most noted men will be asked to preside over this extraordinary gathering.

The causes which operated to develop the wonderful people of Greece are to-day at work to build a new Athens on the shores of the Pacific. Here the rigors of ice and snow are unknown, unless one seeks them by preference in the nearby Sierras. Here is a bracing, invigorating atmosphere, that develops both body and brain to its highest activity. It is not only a land of balmy breezes and eternal flowers, but of vitality.

Of its restaurants a globe traveller, charmed with "The City of Seven Hills," overlooking the great bay, has written, "It is the only city in the world where you can obtain a dinner cooked in any language." The tables of the Bay Cities groan with the good things of the earth provided at ridiculously small prices—fresh vegetables at every season, fresh fish not only from ocean and bay, but from fresh water rivers and nearby mountain streams. There is every variety of fruit—and all from California, save and except the bananas and pineapples just across from Hawaii.

Eastern people have no idea of the charm with which you are served in the famous restaurants of San Francisco. At the Cliff House you may have your choice of the roar of the breakers, the occasional bark of the seals on the little island below your terrace or of the music which accompanies the clever Spanish dancers in the large salon.

In 1915, in addition to the Midway of the Golden Gate, with its thousand varied attractions, in addition to the great cattle exhibit and the horse show, in addition to the parades and sham fights in which ten thousand troops are to take part, artillery, infantry and cavalry; in addition to the wonderful exhibits of every form of flying machines over bay and Presidio, there will be a duplication of the Circus Maximus, in which a thousand gladiators will take part—amphitheatres, costumes, armor and weapons exactly patterned after the days of the Emperor Nero. The gladiators will be chosen from among the athletes of the Olympic Club.

The Greek residents of San Francisco are astir, and it is proposed to build on Telegraph Hill, near the Exposition grounds, in enduring marble, an exact duplicate of the Parthenon, which looked down on Athens from the Acropolis

Sherlock Holmes Outdone by the New Scientific Detectives—No. 13

On this page is the conclusion of Case W., the newest of these remarkable articles detailing the exploits of the modern criminologists. The beginning of Case W. tells how Benot, the trusted messenger of the Surete Bank of Marseilles, suddenly, while carrying over a million francs in gold notes and securities, in the bank's automobile, to a branch institution. How, arriving there, he carried the treasure to the room of the bank to find the gold bags filled with worthless paper and the securities gone, how the body of Benton, the chauffeur, was found behind the rear seat of the limousine, and how Dr. Balthazard, the famous French criminologist, declared that Santon had been dead nearly two hours, although Benot had been driven by him, apparently, less than an hour before.

The Conclusion of Case W.,

CLOSE upon the sound of the shot followed a woman's scream. The door burst open and in rolled two of Dr Balthazard's aides, clutching a third man whose hand still gripped a revolver. Right on their heels came the girl who had confessed to owning the bow-bedecked lead pencil.

The third man had a small red mustache, light blue eyes and the lobe of his left ear had been cut away. Mechanically the director noted that he was small—no more perhaps than five feet seven inches tall!

A violent fit of coughing shook the prisoner. The girl ran to him and held a handkerchief to his lips. The Director noted the stain of red that appeared on it showing the characteristic consumptive hemorrhage, though not a violent one.

"Captain," said Dr. Balthazard sharply, "I ask you to give us your parole that you will not attempt suicide."

At the word "Captain" the man straightened up and brought his heels together. Half way toward a military salute he stopped and slouched.

"Why do you call me captain?" he asked. "I'm no army man."

"No" said Dr. Balthazard pleasantly. He turned to the director who was looking a little soft awe in his eyes. "As you see," said the criminologist, "I was right. Occupation hands are strong. This man could not help betraying himself when he heard me call him by what was once probably his military rank. You notice he was about to salute and the military attitude was unmistakable."

The director nodded; the prisoner glared the girl looked on with agonized eyes.

"They actually minimized their chances of apprehension by the boldness of their plan, said Balthazard. "The substitution of the double for Santon and the time used to get between the bank and its branch enabled the conspirator's automobile to get away without the hue and cry which would have been raised at once. If the murder and robbery had been discovered when Benot returned to the auto in the rapid ride there was little, if any chance of Benot discerning anything amiss.

"After the automobile had drawn up at the branch it was easy for Leconte to divest himself of his masquerading outfit, mingle with the crowd and disappear.

"After I had the descriptions fixed it was an easy matter to get the men. The arresting officer was caught by my police in the automobile while on the road to Versailles. Leconte, as I suspected, returned to the room opposite the bank, and was there captured.

At this moment one of Dr. Balthazard's men opened the door and whispered to his chief.

"Bring it in," said the latter curtly. The man went out and returned bearing a large green box. The lid was open. Dr. Balthazard lifted out two bags and poured from them a flood of golden louis; took next a package of bank notes and lifted out last another package of securities.

"Here is your money," he said to the director, "Charles Leconte, an ex-prisoner, who has served at Toulon and there learned the useful trade of shoemaker, is under arrest. He has by the way confessed and charges the man, Captain Boudelot, with having instigated and inspired the crime."

The prisoner, with a mighty effort, tore loose from the police. He seized the revolver that lay before the director and leveled it at the criminologist. As he did so the girl sprang before him, crying:

"No, Henri, no! No more killing!"

It was too late. The prisoner had pulled the trigger. The girl received the bullet squarely in the breast. As she fell the prisoner turned the muzzle of the weapon to his head and blew out his brains.

The criminologist, the director and Benot ran to the girl. The bullet had gone through her heart!

"Bring in Leconte," ordered Dr. Balthazard.

The police returned gripping a powerfull, bulky man of about forty years of age. As he saw the bodies he raised his left hand to his heart, and on the first finger the Director noticed a large diamond ring.

"Ah, now Leconte, the fruit of your crime," said Dr. Balthazard sternly.

Remove the bodies," he ordered. Leconte sank shaking into a chair. The bewildered Director turned to Dr. Balthazard.

"Your work is all a mystery to me," he said. "I cannot understand how you have gotten these people, nor how you could describe them so accurately before you saw them, nor how you read so clearly the method of the crime."

"I was first able to determine that Leconte had been dead by a drop of blood which had fallen from the instrument used to kill him upon the top of the box," said Dr. Balthazard. "We can determine the exact age of a blood stain by certain fine tests the matter is an extremely technical and involved one, and has been made the subject of very exhaustive monographs. Suffice it to say that these tests are mathematically correct, and by them and by the conditions of Santon's body, I was enabled to fix his death at a time within an hour of the time the bank's automobile was driven up to the doors of the Branch Office. Manifestly the dead man could not have driven the automobile."

"But how could you describe the automobile?" asked the Director.

"The tracks at the side entrance of the bank showed plainly where another motor had driven close up to the one in which sat Santon. The closeness of the tracks to those of the bank's auto showed me that the dash boards had been removed to permit it to press close to the other car. Beside that, I found on the handle on the front door of the bank's car a large smear of olive-green paint. Measuring the tracks I was forced to the conclusion that as the second automobile drove up this projection scraped against the side leaving a large scratch.

"We can tell the exact make of an automobile by peculiar marks. We found that our measurements fitted exactly the measurements of the 1909 Panhard. My description of the tires was gained easily by the marks on the light snow.

"But how could you say that the gang had their headquarters on the sixth floor of the building opposite us?" asked the Director.

"When I went through the Bank I was on the look out for minute divergencies from the ordinary," said Dr. Balthazard. "It was plain even to an unscientific detective that the murderers must have had a confederate within the bank. else how would they know that you were making an unusually heavy shipment? When I saw a lead pencil with a yellow bow tied to it leaning against the window my suspicions were aroused. The pencil had not been thrown down carelessly, but was placed leaning on the side of the window carefully. The window is a deep one. The poor girl betrayed herself to me by her eagerness to remove it.

I left the pencil as it was and went to the opposite building. I discovered that it could be seen from only one window in that building, and that was on the sixth floor. There was no one in this room, and, on unlocking the door, I verified the fact that the signal could be plainly seen from this window. This room, I found, was occupied by two men who claimed to be agents for the South American Rubber Company. I felt sure that the other pencils with bows of different colors tied to them had been meant for different signals and that the one with the bow of the gang to return to what they thought was a safe hiding place. I stationed my men about, and the result was the capture of the army officer who has just killed himself."

"But how could you tell, before you saw this man, that he was a consumptive, and how could you describe him so minutely?" asked the Director.

"The first question is the only one that needs a scientific explanation," said Dr. Balthazard. "It has been recently discovered that certain disease germs make their way through the pores of the skin, are deposited on the surface with the perspiration, and so be communicated. Among such germs is the tuberculosis bacillus. Curiously, under excitement this throwing off the germs through the skin is stimulated in the consumptive. I made a most careful examination of the box that held the bags of money, of the notes themselves, of the box, and so on. And I found on them numbers of tubercular bacilli. There were no germs left on Santon's neck by the fingers of his strangler. Manifestly then the strangler was not the consumptive. Neither was Benot, nor the cashier at the bank—the only others who handled these articles. Manifestly, therefore, the germs came from the confederate of this man here who drove the robbers' automobile.

"My other minute descriptions of this ill-fated officer I got simply by asking the people in the other building what the occupants of the sixth floor looked like."

At this moment Dr. Balthazard touched the Director's arm, and pointed to Leconte. His head bent low, his eyes fixed on the floor, the right hand of the prisoner was nervously making cross after cross on the polished mahogany arm of his chair.

Dr. Balthazard gave an order, and the men took Leconte to another part of the room.

"I found these same little cross marks on the window of the bank's automobile," said Dr. Balthazard. "Most people have some nervous habit which betrays them. Some men when listening, or waiting, or abstracted in some way, will draw queer heads; some will tear paper; some will make little circles with anything that comes into their hands, and so on.

"These stigmata of nervousness are useful to the criminologist. When we compare the marks that Leconte has made on the arm of your chair with those on the windows of the bank's auto we will find them to be the same.

"The marks on Santon's throat gave us accurately the formation of the strangler's hands. Little tears in the skin, under the chin, proved to me the presence of a sharp pointed diamond on the left hand. The cutting of the stone, which was indicated in the marks, showed me that it was a diamond. All stones have their distinctive cuts."

"But how did you know that he was a shoemaker?" asked the Director.

"Because Santon was killed by means of a shoemakers awl being thrust into the top of his skull," said Dr. Balthazard. "The distinguishing marks of other weapons are being carefully studied, and the wound could have been caused by nothing else but the awl."

"Still that would not have made him a shoemaker."

"No," said Dr. Balthazard, "but an examination of his thumb marks on the window panes and on other parts of the automobile showed a long callous on the outer part of the first thumb joint. This callous comes from holding the awl, and is what is called an occupational mark. There is another occupational mark of the shoemaker—a round callous at the base of the thumb. You will find such a callous on this man's hand."

"But why should they have driven the automobile to the branch bank"

Simply to give the other auto time to get away.

"The girl sprang before him crying. 'No, Henri, no! No more killing!' It was too late."

The Most Famous American Detective

Detective Wm. J. Burns.

It is perhaps not surprising that very widespread interest has been aroused by the use of the interesting little scientific instrument called the dictagraph, which I employed in connection with the McNamara dynamiting case and elsewhere. The dictagraph is only one instance of the usefulness of modern science in detective work. The successful detection of crime has now largely passed out of the old of daystem of haphazard guesswork and is shaping itself along the lines of more strictly scientific study.

The recent progress of the professional criminologist of France and Germany is little understood in America, where very few detectives avail themselves of the new resources of science.

I am making a conservative statement when I say that the actual application in real life in detective work of the methods of Professor Reiss, of the University of Lusanne; Professor Gross, of Germany, and others are often more bewildering to the uninformed than any of the imaginary detective work of Sherlock Holmes.

I am familiar work the work of foreign detectives and the records of recent modern scientific detection of crime given here on this page are very striking and instructive examples of how we avail ourselves of the tremendous resources of modern science when the peculiarities of the case require it.

The Ants' Dressmaker! Pet Ants Are Made Into Perfect Ladies

Mlle. Vix, the Clever Parisienne, Who Is Earning a Fortune Making Dresses for Ants.

Sheath Skirt. Pannier. Hobble. Polite Ants. Harem Skirt.

THE most remarkable dressmaker in the world without question is Mlle. Germaine Vix, the French actress. Her clientele consists entirely of ants!

It isn't merely a hobby with Mlle. Vix, for she earns a fair income from her unique business. It has come to be quite the fad of the moment in Paris among the fashionable set to own half a dozen or more of Mlle. Vix's ants, attired in the wonderful costumes and fashions for them.

As even the largest of the insects are no more than half an inch in length, it will be readily understood that the task of clothing them is by no means an easy one, especially as Mlle. Vix is not satisfied with anything but the latest modes for her tiny friends.

When the sheath skirt was in vogue she created a wonderful costume for one of her favorite ants, and small as it was, it was an exact counterpart of some of the most exclusive models then seen on the Paris boulevards. The harem skirt and the bobble skirt were not neglected either, and now that the pannier has come into fashion the patient dressmaker has worked out minute copies of that creation for the insects.

Mlle. Vix is blessed with a very delicate sense of touch and her long tapering fingers enable her to handle the ants to the greatest advantage. She works with a magnifying glass, and her stitches are so minute that they are quite invisible to the naked eye.

The costumes are made of the very finest silks and satins, a whole gown being easily made out of a few square inches of the material. Fitting and trying on are by no means the ordeal for the insects that the same operations are for mortals, for Mlle. Vix is very quick and can take an ants measurements within a very few minutes. It must not be imagined, however, that there is anything slipshod in the finished product. Every gown is cut and finished with the same care as is bestowed on those turned out by fashionable Parisian modistes.

Mlle. Vix is not satisfied with attiring the ants in fashionable finery, however. She trains them to do various stunts. It all requires infinite patience, but the ants are quick to learn what is required of them, and they seem to appreciate the trouble their mistress takes to make them look respectable.

One of the ants, of the soldier variety, Mlle. Vix attired in a Prince Albert suit and silk hat a la Hammerstein, and she trained this young gallant to escort one of the female ants, costumed in an elaborate paunier gown, along a miniature boulevard. The performance was very creditable.

"The pastime is not only amusing but instructive," the actress declared, "for it proves more eloquently than all the sermons ever dull wood could what a lot can be accomplished by patience and persistence.

"The making of the costumes is by no means an easy task and is somewhat trying on the eyes, while it requires more patience than the average woman would care to bestow to make the ants learn their various feats. Ants are renowned for their remarkable instinct, and it is really wonderful what these instincts can be taught to do."

Mlle. Vix has trained many hundreds of ants. She sells them to her friends and gets high prices for them. A set of six, with complete outfits, brought her no less than $500 recently.

Just what may be accomplished with ants was demonstrated not long ago by a series of moving pictures showing them performing various marvellous trick

A globe made of wood eight hundred times as heavy as the body of an ant was readily suspended in the air by the insect which strapped the globe to its strong jaws.

This same ant, having shown itself a champion weight-lifter, then proceeded to display its pulling powers by drawing a silver couch towards its nest. It occasionally eased itself by going from side to side like a horse going up hill.

Grasping a quarter between its jaws, one ant retained its hold after it had been lifted in the air by one leg with a pair of micro-forceps.

Under natural conditions, the achievements of the ants are just as wonderful as those they are made to perform for public exhibition.

These insects have been referred to as the Japanese of the insect world, they are so industrious and determined. They will fight to the death for the freedom of their nests, and when danger threatens, they assemble quickly at the call to arms and put all their powers into the struggle.

Scientists who have made a study of the little creatures declare that their labors are well repaid, and it is probable that the fad made popular by Mlle. Vix's industry may lead to a more general knowledge of these little wonders of the insect world.

Masterpieces Painted With The Crushed Hearts of Queens

Amazing Discovery That the Hearts of France's Royal Families, Disinterred at the Revolution, Were Used as Pigments by World-Famous Artists

"Oedipus and the Sphynx" the Famous Painting by Ingres the Pigments for Which It Is Now Discovered, Were Mixed with the Crushed Heart of Princess Sophie, Daughter of Louis XV.

THE hearts of the greatest Kings and the loveliest Princesses in French history have been ground up to make rich colors for French painters.

Documentary evidence exists to prove that this seemingly incredible freak of grewsome superstition is really a fact.

Now we may believe that the exquisite coloring which gives tenderness to a landscape by Millet comes from the heart of a gentle Princess, and that the vigor of a Franz Hals cavalier comes from the real heart of some old tyrant.

The revelations concerning these transactions in hearts are published in the Bulletin of the Academy of Arts of Berlin, a very reputable publication. Frenchmen, however, were the first to investigate the subject, as French Kings and French artists are principally concerned.

It is well known that during the French Revolution the bodies of the Kings of France and their families, who had been buried for a thousand years in the ancient Abbey of St Denis, near Paris, were dug up and cast into a common trench. There were the bodies of Dagobert, one of the early founders of the monarchy; Saint Louis, the canonized King, the terrible Queen Catherine de Medici, Henry of Navarre, and hundreds of others who are famous in the long annals of French history.

After the monarchy was restored in 1815, the remains of the Kings and Queens were dug up from their nameless graves and put together as carefully as possible, and reburied in the Abbey of St. Denis, which was also carefully restored. In putting the bodies together the authorities could only act upon the information of a few men who had seen the original coffins opened. It has always been regarded as most probable that the legs of one King were placed with the head of another, and that other similar confusions took place during the reburial.

The actual reburial took place in 1817. A picture of this ceremony has just been placed on exhibition in the Musee Carnavalet, which is devoted entirely to matters connected with the history of Paris. The exhibition of this picture has led to the revelation of the misuse of the royal hearts.

A document relating to the reburial was unearthed from the National Archives of France and attached to the picture to make it more instructive. It read as follows:

"The royal corpses were transported to-day, January 18, 1817, to the Abbey of St. Denis, in their original bronze coffins, and the ceremony was attended by the clergy and a guard of honor. They were buried in two vaults, of which each was sixteen feet square. In the one were laid seven Kings, seven Queens and forty-seven Princes and Princesses of the House of Bourbon. In the other were laid eighteen Kings of earlier lines, from Dagobert up to King Henry IV.; ten Queens and twenty-four Princes and Princesses of their families. When the ceremony was over I asked the superintendent for permission to open a few of the royal sarcophagues, so that I could get a glimpse of the bodies. He gave his permission, and opening them I found that the corpses were fossilized and looked very much like the mummies. There was no trace of their hearts. It was evident that the hearts had been taken from the bodies."

On the corner of the painting was written separately a number and shelf mark, and the words "National Archives." This gave a clue to the well known French literary man, Ernest Daudet, and enabled him to find a large amount of authentic information, hitherto kept secret, in the National Archives. In a half decayed and neglected cabinet were discovered documents of the period of the Revolution, most of which concerned a man named Radel, the official architect of Paris during that period. One of them signed by Radel read as follows:

"By order of the National Convention I have opened the vaults of the Abbey of St. Denis, in which the remains of former French reigning families were buried, and deposited them in a trench. Citizen Saint Martin, a painter, who was present on the occasion, told me that the painters of all ages had bought for enormous sums the hearts of royal personages to be used in the colors they used for their paintings, in order to give them a magic power and beauty, lacking otherwise. He told me that Rembrandt, Correggio, and many other famous painters had used the desiccated human hearts in mixing their paints, especially the hearts of rulers and great persons.

"He proposed that we should take the hearts and divide the profits among us, as the committee would not care what we did with them. Although I doubted his statement about the use of the hearts, I followed the suggestion. We found most of the hearts in silver cases, each of which bore the name of the King or Queen to whom it had belonged. I presented to Saint Martin the heart that he seemed to appreciate most of all, saying: 'Monsieur Saint-Martin, you have in your hands the heart of Louis XIV.'"

"Give me back my heart!" I hear my picture cry, confessed the dying artist, St. Martin." One Can Imagine the Restless Spirit of Princess Sophie, Rising from Her Tomb, and Crying Out in Those Same Words to Ingres' Painting.

Another document contained the complaint of Saint Martin to the revolutionary committee, accusing Radel of illegally appropriating the hearts, of which he had promised half to him, but had given only in fact three, besides that of Louis XIV. He requested the Convention to make an investigation of the enormous prices for which Radel had sold the hearts to artists. As a witness in the case he named a man named Schunck, who also had bought some hearts from Radel. The Convention regarded the matter lightly. It was apparent that Radel had influence with most of the members, and Saint Martin's complaint was dismissed.

The matter, however, did not stop with this. A third document in the archives is the complaint of Francois Gerard, the famous painter of the Revolutionary and Napoleonic period, to the effect that he had bought from Saint Martin, a heart which was represented to him to be that of King Louis XIV. He afterwards found that the heart of an inferior king had been palmed off on him as that of the great Louis XIV., had been sold by Saint Martin to the painter Rolin. Gerard needed the heart to mix colors in painting his "Psyche and Cupid," a beautiful picture which now hangs in the Louvre in Paris.

The Convention dismissed this complaint, because of the influence of Radel and was evidently anxious to suppress the matter.

Another document in the National Archives is a letter from a man named Schunck, a friend of Radel and Saint Martin, mentioning the prices for w... Radel sold the hearts and a list of artists who had bought the hearts. Thus Jacques Louis David, one of the greatest painters of the revolutionary period, and the favorite artist of Napoleon is said to have bought the heart of the Duke of Orleans, Regent of France, for 7,000 francs and that of Queen Maria Henrietta, a French princess who married King Charles I., of England, for 10,000 francs.

Schunck states that these hearts were used by David in painting his masterpieces "The Coronation of the Emperor Napoleon" and "Brutus."

(Photogravure Print by Braun & Clement, New York and Paris.)

Another noted artist of the revolutionary period who acquired some of the hearts was Jean Auguste Dominique Ingres. His great masterpiece "Oedipus questioning the Sphynx" is said to have been painted with the heart of the Princess Sophie, daughter of King Louis XV., a Princess whose charming and gracious features have been enshrined on canvas by Nattier, the favorite painter of the generation that was swept away by the revolution.

The subject is being investigated apart from the documents in the National Archives. It appears that many modern artists have believed strongly in the value of the human heart as a material in mixing colors.

Some artists believe that these molecules of tissue which have once felt all the passions of the royal hearts would express something of the same passions when worked into paint.

There is a shade of red called "Caput Mortuum"—"death's head," used in making deep shadows especially on faces in portraits. The heart of a king is said to be especially valuable in preparing this color.

It is said that many American multi-millionaires and their families possess paintings in some cases portraits of themselves painted with the hearts of French Kings, and the even such modern painters as Jean Francois Millet, Gustave Moreau and Paul Dubois have used those hearts. It is charged that Gustave Moreau's "Salome" and his "Hercules" have been painted with the heart of Louis the XIII., while the heart of Marie Antoinette, was used by Millet in his "Love the Conqueror," which was sold at the Secretan sale, but destroyed by fire in America, and the "Tree Grafter," a painting of extraordinary beauty.

A document has been found according to which Saint Martin confessed to a priest before his death that he lived in torture, because the pictures, painted with the hearts of queens, haunted him day and night.

"I hear the groaning voice of a young woman and the sobs of another woman in the silent night emanating from those paintings, in which I used the pulverized hearts of two French Queens," he said.

A list will be compiled of the pictures which are supposed to be painted with the hearts of French Kings and Queens. Many of them are at present in America.

There is a rumor current that even the heart of Napoleon the First is missing from the tomb at the Invalides. It is supposed to be in possession of a German painter, living in Paris.

A German critic confirms the statement that hearts are used by artists in mixing their paints. He states that there is a letter in the collection of Count A. Schack, a patron of Arnold Boecklin, the famous German artist, which states that Boecklin used the pulverized hearts of French Kings in painting his masterpiece "The Isle of the Dead" and in other works.

The Scourg

First Photographs of the Most Extraordinary, Portrayal Ever Made of New Testament History

BY portraying the story of the Saviour's life in His own land with perfect fidelity to nature, the wonder-working motion picture camera has at last, in the photographic sense at least, realized the dream which for 2,000 years has stirred men to every form of artistic effort

In every age since the Saviour lived whole libraries have been filled with attempts to give the world a faithful record of his life and times. Acres of canvas have been covered with the delineation of His joys and sorrows; His sufferings have been wrought into tons of sculptured marble. The peasants of Oberammergau have given whole lifetimes to the effort to supply an adequate picture of the lives of Christ, His enemies and His followers.

Yet, beautiful and wonderful as many of these works are, they are all surpassed in powerful realism and fidelity to fact by the remarkable motion pictures of the divine drama which the Kalem Company of New York has just completed in the Holy Land

Not only are these films the most complete and realistic pictures of the Saviour's life ever made, but they will reach a wider audience than has any other record of Him except the New Testament. Where a book is read or a painting seen by a few thousand people, these motion picture films will reach the hearts and minds of millions.

Completed only a few weeks ago, these moving pictures will not be ready for exhibition before next September or October. By the courtesy of the Kalem Company, however, photographs of several of the most striking scenes are reproduced here to-day, and these give an excellent idea of the success with which the stupendous task of visualizing the events of 2,000 years ago has been carried out

The making of these films is not merely the greatest achievement yet recorded in the moving picture field—it is one of the most extraordinary enterprises of modern times Such a graphic portrayal of the great events of a past age must inevitably mark the beginning of a new era in the teaching of history

The fidelity to every known fact of New Testament history which these films reveal is surely the last word in realism. All the leading incidents in the Saviour's life, making a continuous record which requires nearly two hours to present, were photographed in the very places where they actually occurred.

American and English men and women were employed only for the leading characters. For all the minor roles and for the picturesque ensembles natives were used—people whose customs have changed little in the 2,000 years since their ancestors walked side by side with the Saviour on the plains of Nazareth and in the streets of Jerusalem.

It was nearly a year ago that certain members of the clergy suggested the great educational and inspirational value a series of moving pictures of the life of Christ posed in the Holy Land would have. The idea was regarded favorably, although it involved an expenditure of approximately $100,000, and last December a special company of actors and actresses left New York for the Holy Land

This stock company, under the direction of Sidney Olcott, and with Miss Gene Gauntier as leading lady, comprised only twelve members, but was augmented by nine others engaged in England.

Each member of the company was chosen with particular regard for his or her sympathy with the sacred roles to be portrayed. In addition to the company proper, there were scenic artists, architects and operatives, the whole expedition comprising some forty members For the purpose of many of the pictures it was necessary to employ large numbers of natives as supernumeraries. This was never difficult—in fact, it often proved easier to engage the natives required than to drive away the hundreds whose curiosity brought them to the historic scenes where the pictures were being made. Sometimes they seriously interfered with the taking of the pictures.

When the company arrived at Jerusalem a roofless studio was erected within the very shadow of the wall of the ancient city. This studio was required for certain of the pictures which could not be taken elsewhere. Thus, in the case of the interiors of some of the edifices where pictures were taken, the light was not sufficient to enable the camera men to work in such cases the services of the company's architect and scenic artists were called in. Accurate measurements of the interior in question were taken, and, from this and the other data gathered, the architect and scenic workers reconstructed it in plaster in the studio, where the company posed and the pictures were taken

Long before the first pictures were taken every member of the company thoroughly familiarized himself or herself with the roles they were to play. Not only the Scriptures and such other documentary authorities as might furnish the most adequate information regarding the various characters to be portrayed were studied, but consultations were had from time to time by members of the company, individually and collectively, with living Biblical experts and students of scriptural times

In Jerusalem and the vicinity there are many natives with an astonishing knowledge of Biblical lore, and the Franciscan monks, who are strongly established in the Holy Land, were, of course, able to supply much valuable information Every one was ready to help make the pictures as authentic as possible

In making the costumes and preparing the settings for the various scenes the wonderful pictures of Tissot proved of great value, but other authorities were freely consulted. It was observed by members of the company that in dress and manners the present-day natives of the Holy Land differ very little from those of the Saviour's age, and this fact made it somewhat easier than it might otherwise have been to obtain the necessary local color for some of the pictures.

Although when the pictures are exhibited they will, of course, be shown in chronological order —from the birth of Christ until the Crucifixion —there was no necessity to make the films in the same order. All the incidents which took place in a given vicinity were photographed one after another, irrespective of the order in which they actually occurred.

Headquarters having been established at Jerusalem, therefore, it was natural that the first pictures taken should be of events which occurred there. Such events as the Annunciation and the appearance of the Angel of God to Joseph in a dream, which took place at Nazareth, were taken up later on, when the company had completed its work in Jerusalem

To portray the Saviour at various ages naturally required more than one actor. As a matter of fact, there were three. One, a native baby, represented the Saviour in His earliest days. As a boy of twelve he was represented by an English boy, who had been selected from thousands who applied for the part because of his spiritual coun matic ability thetic nature his part so w when he was acter, men company can him with a reverence the character he countenance reminds one of the familiar pictures of the Madonna, and her dramatic talent fitted her admirably for the role. There were but two other women in the cast, apart from the native supernumeraries. They all had to endure many hardships in their travels through the Holy Land.

Perhaps their most arduous experience was the journey from Jerusalem to the Sea of Galilee, a distance of some 246 miles, from an altitude of 2,600 feet at Jerusalem to 680 feet below the surface of the Mediterranean at Tiberias For the most part it was made on donkeys, but at times it was necessary to traverse many weary miles on foot. The moving picture cameras and other apparatus were transported on camels

What made travelling particularly difficult were the terribly rough, stony roads, infested by Bedouin bandits, from whom the members of the company were protected by an armed guard provided by the Turkish Government. In the course of this trip it was frequently necessary for the male members of the company to carry the women over the rougher places

But the trip had to be made, for, bound up in the continuous range of huge mountains, which rear themselves to an almost uniform level, are some of the most interesting spots in biblical history The spirit of the biblical narrative could only be rendered faithfully by going to these spots

Jacob's Well, where Jesus met the woman of Samaria, Sebastiyeh, the ancient city of Samaria, where John the Baptist was supposed to have been beheaded; Nazareth, where the Saviour spent his youth; the Sea of Galilee, the scene of the miracle of the fishes—and many other sacred spots are here located

It was in the course of this trip that the members of the company were particularly struck by the slight changes that time has wrought in the matter of native dress and manners

The long, loose robe of the peasant, made from striped cloth; the sash around the waist; the abba, or loose coat, that is worn over it, made from a cloth not unlike burlap; the sheepskin coat of the shepherd; the turban bound round the head with a fillet; the peculiar shoes or sandals—all these are practically identical today with those worn two thousand years ago by the men and women who witnessed or participated in the greatest drama in the world's history.

So, too, the one-handed, rough wooden plough; the rude yoke that binds the two native oxen together; the goad which the peasant uses to drive them with—all are of the same pattern as at the time of Christ. The same primitive method is followed of making the "goolah," or earthenware jar, in which the women carry water—in fact, the very well to which the child Jesus went so often with His Mother is used to-day by the women of Nazareth, whose dress has hardly changed in a single detail. It is not only the dress that remains the same; the life behind it, too—the attitudes, the gestures, the movements—all are two thousand years old. Any day in Nazareth just such a woman as Mary can be seen; and along the road, in the ancient arched bazaar, or about the town, a biblical picture may be met in almost every native, whether he be on camel, donkey or foot.

Where the manners and customs of a people have remained unchanged during centuries, it is possible to recreate ancient scenes without great difficulty, and the chances of preserving historical accuracy are greatly enhanced. The moving picture people found it comparatively easy to obtain all the local color they required. Nothing of importance has changed to such a degree that it could not be reproduced with remarkable fidelity to detail and accuracy

While the natives were as a rule perfectly willing to co-operate in the making of the pictures, at times they rebelled, and but for the influence of the Turkish officials serious trouble might have resulted. An incident of this kind occurred when pictures were to be taken at Calvary. The natives refused to assist. The head sheik explained that as they were Mussulmans, the Governor might object to their taking part in a performance on one of the most sacred spots in the Christian religion.

Nothing that the moving picture company could do to induce the natives to go on with the performance prevailed until Ameen Zaytoun, their dragoman, finally got in touch with the Governor and he not only directed the natives to proceed but sent a detachment of troops to see that they did so.

Nothing has caused such a widespread interest in Jerusalem in recent years as the work of the moving picture people.

The moving picture is something new to the Holy Land, and it was regarded with open-eyed wonder by even the enlightened Easterners. General Abdul Hamid Pasha, Acting Civil Governor of Jerusalem and Military Governor of Jerusalem; Bechara Effendi Habib, Secretary of Foreign Affairs; Hadj Abdul Nafeh, Chief of Police of Jerusalem, and a number of other prominent officials and private citizens were invited to the company's studio to witness the making of some of the pictures. They spent a whole afternoon there during the taking of the pictures portraying the Last Supper and the scenes related to it.

Some idea of the scope of the pictures may be had from the following partial list of scenes and incidents shown:

Starting at Nazareth, with Mary, the Mother of Jesus, as a girl, the first elaborate setting is shown in "The Annunciation." The pictures of the Angel of God appearing to Joseph in a dream are a triumph of moving picture photography. This is followed by the scene showing Joseph and Mary being turned away from the inn and seeking shelter in the stable cave, the finding of the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger, the three wise men on their journey, the adoration of the shepherds, the wise men before Herod, and the Adoration of the Magi.

The Flight of Joseph and the Child into Egypt is depicted with wonderful realism. They are seen in the desert guarded by the Sphinx. Then are shown the sojourn in Babylon, Mary teaching the young Saviour, and the return to Nazareth. The Saviour is shown in the Temple with the doctors, and the foreshadowing of the Cross is beautifully represented, as will be seen from one of the pictures on this page.

The Ministry of the Saviour is shown in a series of remarkable scenes, including one of John the Baptist' discerning the Saviour from afar, a magnificent piece of dramatic presentation

The conspiracy against the Saviour, the Lord's Supper, the First Communion, the Agony in the Garden, the remorse of Judas, the Saviour before Pilate, and the wonderfully dramatic scenes leading up to the Crucifixion are worked out with wonderfully realistic effects.

The film, which is to be called "Jesus of Nazareth," will be five thousand feet long and will take an hour and forty minutes to run off without any intermission. A suitable lecture prepared by a well known authority will be given in connection with the pictures.

Already applications have been made by clergymen throughout the country for the use of the film in Sunday school work, and there is no doubt that it will be immensely popular from the first moment.

When-The-First Leaves-Fall Dresses

"Lucile" Coat and Skirt Showing the New "Drooping" Figure.

A Simple "Lucile" Fall Costume of Charmeuse for Tall and Slender Women.

The "Lucile" Sunburst Cloak.

By Lady Duff-Gordon "Lucile."

I AM able to give you to-day the very first glimpse at a few modes designed for the early Fall and there are those who will not be sorry how soon that delightful season arrives.

The long plain lines of the afternoon gown shown in the photograph will appeal to all tall, slender women. This gown of plain nattier blue charmeuse is almost seamless. It is made, of course, of the widest charmeuse. The only seams are under each sleeve and down each side. The sleeves cut in with the body are very long and narrow. Freedom of action and the necessary fullness at the bust line are given by three little crosswise plaits.

There is a slight draped effect at the front of the waist line given by two shallow folds just at the belt-line. The rest of the robe falls in graceful folds to the floor. The skirt is very long in front and has a graceful clinging train. The only decoration in the whole gown consists of narrow bands of dull rose satin arranged in Greek border. With this gown is worn a large nattier blue straw hat trimmed with white wings. The chiffon scarf is of dull rose chiffon.

In the sketches I am sending, you will notice the sunburst cloak, which has been said to be a triumph of simplicity and draping. More interesting perhaps is the coat and skirt shown in another sketch, which fashionable women are going to cultivate.

I am sending, too, a sketch of gown I created for Miss Gertie Millar in "Gipsy Love" which shows the effectiveness of a black costume when relieved by a glimmer of gold, flashes of scarlet and touches of purple and blue.

And then, not by any means least in interest among the season's creations are the new "Mermaid modes," if I may be permitted to thus christen the latest bathing dresses, which are really so attractive that they will give one a new interest in the daily dip, and more than make up for all the preliminary and subsequent trouble it involves. Though, to be sure, the necessary undressing and redressing are both alike very much simplified now a days, thanks to the fact that under wear is reduced to a minimum, and that the all-in-one dress, with its array of stud fasteners in place of refractory buttons and loops, or the even more elusive hook and eye, is practically the universal wear of women of all ages.

And, do you know, there is extraordinarily little difference between the day dress you will discard and the suit you will don for the sea, and whose fabric will almost certainly be the taffetas silk, which has been simply supreme all through the season, and is now bringing its brief but glorious reign to a by no means unworthy end by thus fashioning the smartest bathing dresses. For you may take it from me that the fever of favor for this particular fabric has burnt itself out by now, and that within the next two or three months we shall have transferred our allegiance from taffetas to bengalines and Ottomans, heavy soft crepes and the always exquisite charmeuse. Yes, taffetas has almost had its day, but in these, its last hours, you are going to love it almost as well as when it first made its appearance and its instantaneous success, and it will probably be associated with some of your greatest successes. If, for example, you elect to have a silken bathing dress whose tunic is all of demure black, save for just a central and bordering piping of cerise silk between narrow bandings of black braid and for some tiny, closely clustered buttons, which repeat and emphasize this same vivid coloring. The tunic is deeply curved in front and at the back, and is up almost to the waist at either side, where bandings of braid hold it together sufficiently to preserve the slender outline of the figure, but not so closely as to hide the piquant presence and contrast of knickers of cerise silk. For this is the novelty note of the season's bathing dresses- the wearing of very bright colored knickers, either cerise, emerald green, sapphire blue or royal purple, with a black tunic, the swathed turban head dress always repeating and emphasizing the chosen and contrasting color while very often, too, high satin boots and silk stockings to match will be added to a toilet which will certainly, therefore, be sufficiently eye-arresting to satisfy the woman who wants to attract attention. Oh! and you must not forget either to have a waterproof satin bag, which will give a final touch of color, while I would suggest, too that you should provide for a very desirable variation of effect in your toilet by further investing in a cap of reversible satin, cutwardly black, but just showing a flash of the inner color in the box loops at one side, and then in a pair of black stockings and satin boots.

Another and somewhat less startling idea is to wear rather full "trousers" of black and white spotted foulard beneath a tunic of black taffetas, finished off with a deep sailor collar and loosely knotted scarf of the soft spotted silk, the correct accompaniments for this distinctly attractive toilet being black footwear and a square handkerchief of the foulard, which is laid over and permanently attached to an inner and closely fitting cap of rubber which protect the hair and leaves the outer silk free for draping and decorative purposes. The other most favored form of head wear is a Dutch cap, which is generally made in plaid silk, and always provided with a capacious bag of waterproof silk to match, the care which is taken to have all the accessories of even these somewhat informal toilets in complete accord being a very satisfactory sign of feminine realization of the importance of the little details in any successful scheme of dress.

My Secrets of Beauty // By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

The Greatest Living Beauty //

No. 184---ARE YOU RUN DOWN?

MME. CAVALIERI tells to-day how the woman who is "run down" may regenerate herself.

It isn't a question of too little exercise, she declares, but rather a matter of too much.

Rest, sleep and plenty of fresh air are among the remedies she suggests in an article full of valuable advice.

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

YOU are "all run down," you say?

Have you ever considered what that old-fashioned phrase means? Then you have not watched any one tire from running, his muscles limp, his head bent, his features drawn, his eyes dull from exhaustion. When you are "all run down" you are in exactly the condition of that spent runner. What does the runner do? Rest. What should you do? Rest. Well meaning persons seeing your dull eyes and noting your listless manner may advise exercise, but that is because they mistake fag for sluggishness. If you are growing fat and heavy and inert from inactivity, assuredly you need exercise, but being "all run down" is quite a different state. In the first case your vitality is clogged and imprisoned. In this the vitality is nearly gone. The reservoir of your strength is almost empty. It is a matter of the greatest concern to you to, as soon as possible, refill it.

First rest. "Catch up" with sleep. Or, as I have heard busy persons who hoarded the precious gold of health say, "sleep ahead." Take more than the actual rest required to meet the demands upon your strength at this time, in anticipation of the demands of the future. It is a marvel what an upbuilder is the simple device of going to bed an hour or two hours earlier than usual. Try it. Give it the thorough trial of continuing it for at least two weeks or more. The enfolding, threadbare mantle of the years will seem to fall away from you. Your eyes will be brighter, your complexion clear and more pink, your step lighter and your spirits higher. In brief you will be younger.

Never mind if you cannot sleep at first. Be persistent and woo the "sweet restorer." Do not believe that the late hour habit of years cannot be broken. It can. I know, for I have broken it.

Take a midday rest. The best method is to retire to a dark room, loosen your stays, lie flat upon your back, without a pillow. But if this is not feasible, at least recline in one of the long chairs used on the deck of a steamer, or sit with your limbs outstretched on a level with the seat of your chair. Go where you can get the cleanest, freshest air, and breathe deeply of it. If you are in a city go to the roof.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri

Draw the Towel Across the Shoulders So Briskly That the Skin Tingles.

At the same time eat nourishing food. Depend more upon careful chewing of the food than upon large quantities of it. Eat meat once a day and eat vegetables rich in iron, for they are makers of good blood. Eat asparagus and beets, cabbage and spinach and tomatoes and little bread, and that only of the coarse grained kind.

Cleanse your lungs many times a day by inhaling deeply, holding the air in the lungs for as long a time as was spent in the inhaling, then sweep the lungs clean by expelling the air with long, deep breath.

When the rest and nourishing food and deep breathing are doing their work of rebuilding and you feel strong once more, exercise may be resumed. The easiest and most natural of these is stretching. Rise on tiptoes and stretch. Raising the arms above the head with finger tips extended, stretch, stretch, stretch. At the same time yawn if you can, for this frees the body of the poisons that are weighing down the lungs and vitiating the blood.

At this period of rebuilding the "run down" system, slow walking will be of benefit. Don't let any one tempt you to over-strenuous effort. Saunter. Refuse to hurry.

Have you a friction band? If not buy one. It will be money well expended. Or make one for yourself from a rough new towel. Fold the towel so that it will be four times its original thickness. Sew the folds firmly together on both sides and at the ends, and to the ends attach strong stitched bands. Grasping these bands firmly, draw the towel across the shoulders so briskly that the skin tingles and reddens. In the same way draw it across the back, the hips, the back of the legs, the stomach. But most important of all is it to vigorously rub the spine. To do this draw one end of the friction band over the shoulder and draw the band briskly up and down the back.

A glass of milk into which an egg has been beaten is a good beginning for the day, and a glass of hot milk on retiring a good way to complete it. Ten or more glassfuls of water drunk during the day will aid the rebuilding by washing away the poisons that have done the downpulling.

Do your rebuilding as much as possible in the out of doors. If fresh air did not perform countless services for you it would steady your tired nerves by banishing worry. We never worry while living in great quantities of pure air.

HOW the LION had his SORE TOOTH PULLED

After Brutus Was Secured with Rope, He Was Thrown on His Back and the Offending Tooth Removed.

How the Lion's Molar Looked When It Was Removed.

A Remarkable Operation Performed in London Upon the King of Beasts

A LION with a sore tooth has generally been regarded as the acme of undesirable companionship, but according to one who have had experience with lions similarly afflicted, the distinction has been wrongly bestowed.

Brutus, a young lion connected with the White City collection in London, is the animal in question. Brutus recently had a very badly ulcerated tooth. The majestic brute's face swelled up to twice its normal size, and it undoubtedly suffered great agony.

The keepers did what they could for it, at a safe distance but the animal resented their ministrations and tried its best to break out of its cage, the bars of which, although made of iron an inch thick, were bent by the animal in its fury.

Fearing that the animal would do itself serious injury in its frantic efforts to free itself, the keepers concluded to take heroic measures to rid it of its troublesome molar It took seven men to perform the unusual dental operation, six of them holding on to the ropes which kept the lion in check while the seventh applied the huge forceps.

Three of the men were more or less seriously injured before they succeeded in securing the savage beast, but eventually they got the best of him, as will be seen by the remarkable pictures on this page. He was thrown on his back, his limbs being securely held with ropes, and after his mouth had been pried open and wedges inserted between his cruel jaws, the head keeper applied the forceps and wrenched away. It took several tremendous pulls before the offending tooth finally parted, the lion roaring during the operation.

A few years ago Head Keeper William Snyder, of the Central Park Zoo, New York, performed a daring feat when Rose, the most highly prized lioness of the menagerie, and one of the fiercest, swallowed a bone. The operation was then unprecedented in the annals of the institution, and was performed in the presence of a group of awed spectators. Rose was extremely hungry, and when part of a cow's neck with vertebrae undetached was thrown to her, tackled it with such zest that one of the large bones lodged in her throat.

The animal nearly choked to death and ran around her cage with eyes nearly bobbing out of her head Keepers flocked around with sharp instruments thinking the animal had gone mad, but when Snyder was summoned he at once divined the cause of the trouble.

Approaching the cage, he said softly, "Rose, come here Rose, Rose!" The beast sprang toward the bars, with her mouth open. Snyder got a short hook, patted the animal on the head and while cajoling and coddling it managed to get the hook into the animal's throat.

With a quick jerk he pulled the bone from its lodging place, and then, Rose having regained full use of her jaws, he sprang away to avoid being bitten. The keeper's skill and courage undoubtedly saved the lioness' life.

Even more hazardous operations have been frequently performed by Raymond L. Ditmars, the curator of reptiles at the Bronx Zoo, New York, whose task it is to extract the venom from deadly snakes for medical use.

Recently at the New York Homeopathic College at Flower Hospital Curator Ditmars demonstrated how this is done. Opening a dress suit case he took from it a black bag, which he turned upside down, and out of which writhed a big moccasin snake. Amid a chorus of suppressed cries from the women onlookers, the reptile flopped from the table to the floor.

Dr. Ditmars grasped a stick, flattened it against the back of the snake's head and then deftly picked the reptile up with the other hand There were more gasps while he was doing it, but he afterward explained that there had been no danger, as the snake had been in no position to strike.

Placing it on the table, with a bottle of antidote serum handy for use in the event of accidents, Dr. Ditmars then squeezed the sides of the snake's head, and a quantity of the deadly venom came forth from its fangs.

What appeared to be a far more hazardous feat was recently performed by the intrepid reptile man some months ago, when he was challenged to put his head between a python's jaws, and did so. A snake's lower jaw is not hinged to his upper, as in the case of most other animals. There is a sort of flexible hinge which enables the reptile to extend its jaws to an almost inconceivable degree, a sufficient indeed to swallow a goat if necessary.

Doctor Ditmars entered the rock bound home of the big snakes, awakened the Ceylon python, and after prying the snake's jaws wide open, inserted his head. The huge jaws remained open, and after a moment or two the curator emerged unscathed.

When asked why it was that the python had not closed his jaws, the curator declared: "I put oil of bergamot on my hair. The python despises the perfume. That's why he didn't close his jaws."

It Took Seven Men to Prepare the Lion For the Operation.

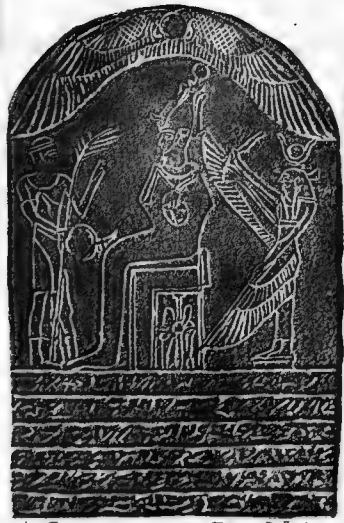
In the Royal Baths of Great Queen Candace.

How the Royal Ladies of Ancient Meroë Enjoyed Every Luxury of Modern Civilization in their Exquisite Tiled, Scented, Sculptured and Flower Decked Pools, just Uncovered by Archeologists.



A CARVING ON THE POOL WALL SHOWING CANDACE'S TOILETTE AFTER THE BATH.

THE "VENUS OF MEROE," A STATUE FOUND BESIDE QUEEN CANDACE'S PALACE BATHING POOL

A MOST fascinating discovery is that of the ancient city of Meroe, between Atbara and Khartoum, on the upper Nile.

The discovery is the work of Professor John Garstang and his associated archaeological workers, who have been furnished with funds for this purpose by the Liverpool Institute of Archaeology.

Meroe was the capital of ancient Ethiopia and the seat of Queen Candace, whose name occurs frequently in ancient history. One Queen Candace is mentioned in the Bible.

The Acts of the Apostles, chapter viii., verse 27, tell us that the high treasurer of the Queen of Ethiopia was converted by Philip. This Queen was Candace, and the most remarkable ruins now found date from her reign.

The expression "Queen Candace" has become an established one, but "Candace" was really the title of a dynasty of female rulers, just as "Pharaoh" was the title of all the rulers of ancient Egypt.

Meroe and the empire of which it was the centre enjoyed woman's rule from a very early period, probably more than 3,000 years ago. How this system grew up is still a mystery, and, indeed, the whole history of Meroe is still very obscure.

Ancient historians like Strabo and Pliny speak of the wonders and curiosities of Meroe and of its female rulers, but it has remained for Professor Garstang at the present day to lay bare its actual remains.

Meroe lies in a very savage, rather barren and sun-baked region. Lions and hippopotami now abound among the ruins. Doubtless it could have been made agreeable by sanitation, and the surrounding country made fertile by irrigation. The female rulers probably established their position by their success in doing these things.

Among the many temples, palaces and other buildings discovered at Meroe the most remarkable are the royal baths, a series of buildings not surpassed in the world for their splendor, beauty and convenience. The celebrated baths of Caracalla, at Rome, cannot be compared to this central African structure in splendor.

It was perhaps a knowledge of the uses and advantages of bathing that enabled these African queens to maintain their power in a climate that is to-day regarded as fatal to energy and high achievement.

The baths must have been strikingly beautiful. This is evident in their present condition of ruin and destruction, in which their most brilliant ornamentation is hopelessly marred. They are decorated with colonnades, frescoes, glazed tiles and splendid statues, which rival the work of Greek artists of the finest period.

The baths are so enormous that they must have been sufficient for a large part of the population of Meroe. Probably the city lived under a communistic system, under which the Queen and her lieutenants directed all the public utility of an indescribable character. As women were the dominating sex in Meroe, man was always the centre of attraction and the object of pursuit.

How the rule of woman first became established in this remote African region is still a mystery. It is suggested that some women of a superior race penetrated the country in very early times, and the local negro aborigines, regarding them as of divine origin, chose them for rulers.

"The rule of queens," says one of the investigators, "is no unusual thing in this part of Africa; the position of the sister-consort in Egypt, the right of the sister's son to succeed his uncle in the Cha[illegible] kingdom of Dongola, are instances of African 'feminism' which can be illustrated more strikingly among less developed tribes."

The female rulers must have been capable, but there is no reason to believe that they were gentle. The carvings on the exterior of the Sun Temple at Meroe depict the torture and sacrifice of captives. In a small chamber attached to the southern wall of the temple there was found buried a quantity of jars filled with charcoal and cremated human remains. A bronze statue represented a figure twisted into an attitude of cruel torture.

The monuments found at Meroe depict the gradual passing away of female rule, although in the latest of them greater prominence is given to the Queen than would be the case in other lands.

The religion of these people is very obscure. The prominence of the Bon-god, who may also have been the sun-god, suggests a cult foreign to the old Egyptian forms of worship, and yet the presence of the Bons at Philae in the Temple of Isis shows that some accommodation had been reached between the two groups.

The Meroites delighted in jewels and ornaments and fine raiment. The carved reliefs in the temples show that the kings and queens and upper classes adverted their superiority to manual toil by the length of their nails. The King and Queen wear necklaces and pendants, armlets and bracelets and rings upon their fingers and in their ears, while the princes are arrayed in long tunics flowered with crosses, crescents and other designs.

Both the jewelry and pottery found at Meroe are strikingly beautiful. Professor Garstang discovered in one of the royal palaces two pots full of gold. The blue and green faience in the pyramids [illegible] especially fine.

THE SPAN OF LIFE

Life is a short walk along a narrow thread of destiny beginning and ending in the mysterious unknown.

Hope keeps us balanced as we walk the narrow line.

Life is short as we see it, but in reality it is without beginning and never ends—and long or short, it is all that we have.

YOU, reader, are the figure walking on this slender thread. Every one of the hundreds of millions of human beings on this planet is represented in this picture. Each of us walks alone and must balance himself through life. Many millions walk but a few steps and fall back into the infinite whence they came. Other millions walk half or three-quarters of the way—a small percentage finish the full natural span of a normal life.

If you are old enough to have finished half the journey, you know that this is a good picture of life as it is.

Hesitating, balancing, leaning to this side and to that side, you go along with the span that leads from birth to death.

This is a picture about which all the writers have written, all the poets have sung, all the philosophers have speculated, and all the lawmakers have legislated.

We have all got to take the journey, walk the span, whether we like it or not.

We are not asked when we come here whether we want to come. And it is not left to us to say when we shall go. We come without knowing why, we go without knowing why, and we travel our journey balanced on a thread stretched between the finger and thumb of destiny.

We are not, however, mere machines wound up and set in motion. Something is left to our own decision. We get an inheritance from fathers and mothers through thousands of generations, and it is true that we can only have what they give us.

But we have above everything, and in addition to everything, WILL POWER, the power of thought based on observation and guided by conscience.

We can use our inheritance of character and temperament as the sculptor uses the block of marble, and we can carve that inheritance as we will and at least make of it the best that it can produce.

This you see illustrated in the portraits of human beings taken in childhood and old age. YOU may find two pictures of children much alike—the faces filled with goodness, cheerfulness, kindness and hope.

And the same two faces in old age will be as far apart as vice and kindness. One will have grown stronger and better, and the other will show the stamp of evil thoughts and the uncontrolled passions and wasted will power.

Those that are the most fortunate among men are able in the brief span of life to accomplish work that lasts for centuries, helping others that follow on the shaky walk across the taut thread. Some have been able in one life to benefit endless millions of lives after them. These have been great teachers, discoverers, explorers, scientists, philosophers—and above all, the fearless tellers of new truths.

Blessed are those able to do in one life a work that will help hundreds of millions.

But there is good work that EVERY human can do, there are rules that all can follow, and each man as he walks life's thread should make these rules for himself and follow them.

Do your duty as well as you can do it—and begin by not hurting others in the effort to please or help yourself.

The first duty is to those nearest you. If every man of strength would help the half-dozen human beings nearest to him, the problems of the world would soon be settled. The help must be of the right kind, not merely charity, although that is needed, but also sympathy, a good example, a patience with weakness and dullness, and just dealings even with those that are unjust.

It is possible for every human being who will TO DO DUTY, to think not only of himself but of others, of the whole race and of the future race. In that fact there is complete comfort for every one of us.

Each CAN do his duty, and he who does THAT has done all that can be asked and all that any man ever did since the world began.

Life is tiresome, troublesome, full of care, disappointed and bitter for those that carry responsibility and realize their shortcomings, but it has its reward, as great as its worries.

To possess the friendship and affection of one sincere and loyal human being, to put the welfare of another ahead of your own, finding happiness in that, and to feel when you reach the end of the string and the time comes to fall off into the grave, you have done what you could, have not neglected those that had a right to count upon you—that makes life worth while and w[illegible] disappointments.

What every man must learn unless his life is to be a fail[illegible] himself and put his selfish desires and feelings in second place.

The man who controls himself through his will, who realizes t[illegible] ness of life increases responsibility for the use of every hour and [illegible] lives day by day, as he would live if he knew that that day was th[illegible] a man is happy and his life worth while.

THE NEW WOMAN AND THE OLD -- By Prof. Guglielmo Ferrero

An Interesting Comparison of Femininity in Ancient Rome and To-Day by the Distinguished Italian Historian. (Extracts from the Article by Professor Ferrero in the July HEARST'S MAGAZINE —Printed by Permission of HEARST'S MAGAZINE)

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO

THERE was found some years ago, among the excavations made with much success in Egypt, a papyrus, now called by archaeologists "The Petition of Dionisia." One part of this papyrus, which belongs to the second century A. D., contains some books of this period, another part is the defense of a certain Dionisia before an Egyptian tribunal, where she brought suit against her own father in regard to her dower and other questions of her interest.

To avoid paying Dionisia and her husband the sums they claimed, her father had ordered her husband to return his daughter to him. He thus broke up a marriage of already some years' standing. The daughter claimed in her defense that her father had no right to annul her marriage or take her from her husband, since the marriage was a "recorded" one; that is, made by written act or document. Had it been an "unwritten" marriage, Dionisia would not have contested the right of her father to undo it at his pleasure, without any reason whatever.

From the point of view of ideas to-day dominant in European and American societies, it would be hard to imagine a stranger document than this. For us, marriage is an act of such social importance that the State alone—the law and the courts—have the right to sanction or dissolve it. To leave the destiny of a family to the disposition of the father of either one of the contracting parties, to allow him the right to destroy it at any moment, for his own personal interests and without rendering account to any one, seems to us a monstrous thing. And yet, with a few reserves and restrictions, this monstrous thing was legitimate and reasonable to all antiquity.

From land to land and century to century there were differences, but these were inconsequent, non-essentials. All the ancient world, and Rome in particular, never thought marriage an act that should be left to the will of those who entered into it. It was the affair not of the young couple, but of their parents.

Marriage, as accomplished in ancient Rome, serves to give a clear idea of the way in which antiquity conceived the family. In the upper classes of Rome fathers most often affianced their children while the latter were still infants. They had them marry when still very young, the boys under twenty, the girls at sixteen. They also had irresponsible right to separate any couple at any time. A man might be a model husband, living in perfect happiness with his wife, but if, for some reason or other, the wife displeased her father-in-law, or if some other marriage seemed to him more desirable for his son, the husband could any day be obliged to repudiate the wife, however well-beloved she be.

Among others, this happened to no less a personage than Tiberius, who he stood among the first in the empire, already a consul and a commander of armies in the field. He had married Agrippina, a daughter of Agrippa, and he loved her well. The pair were looked upon in Rome as a model of affection and faithfulness. But at a certain juncture Augustus, Tiberius's adoptive father, decided that for political expediency another marriage would be more desirable, and obliged Tiberius to divorce his wife. The latter was so grieved, Suetonius tells us, that whenever he chanced upon Agrippina in society he wept—he, one of the most dreaded generals of his day!—until Augustus arranged that they should not meet again.

Even Tiberius had to bend to the will of Augustus, for, according to the law and to current opinion, the father was absolute in such matters. Not even a man of consular rank dared rebel against the paternal jurisdiction without the gravest scandal.

These few facts are enough to show how often ideas that in one period and one civilization seem quite natural and evident and simple are, on the contrary, complicated and difficult ones, reached only by long effort, manifold attempts and painful struggles. Could anything seem to us more natural and reasonable than leaving to young people wide liberty of judgment and selection as to their mates of a lifetime? Even though there exist differences on this point in different countries to-day, all Europe and America are agreed in according ample freedom in this respect. To be sure, parents often counsel their children, putting at their disposal the experience of superior years, but rare indeed are the cases in which they urge serious opposition to prevent a longed-for marriage, especially against a son.

We are wont to think that everyone's happiness depends in part on marriage, therefore that it is only just that each individual choose and decide for himself. If free law willed to restore the right of making and unmaking the marriages of their children, the great majority of parents to-day would, without doubt, refuse to assume the responsibility. They would adjudge the power ingenitous, expressive, tyrannical. No father of these days, however averse to the chosen marriage of son or daughter, if resisted with some determination, fails to end by saying to himself: "After all, it is not I who take such a mate. Let each look out for himself."

This complaisance of parents toward their children grew every where apace. The scruple increases constantly against opposing what can make so much for happiness—the free inclination of youth, the spontaneous impetus of sentiment. Who, indeed, would enjoy having gained so many other liberties, if there failed him this one—to youth always the chief—the chance to follow the strongest impulse of his prime, the passion of love?

* * * * *

The family is now purely and simply a form of grouping for common life. Man and woman cannot live solitary. The strongest affection of their powers impels them toward each other. Even when this impulse is wanting, or is spent, living in company with other human beings is a natural need. Each must have about him those with whom he lives in personal intimacy.

This profoundly human office is filled to-day by the family, which serves only, or almost only, this end. Men and women now study, work, take part in government, struggle for wealth and power, or exercise influence upon society, apart from the family.

Once the case was different. The family was then an economic organization, in which woman played a preponderating part. She spun and wove to provide clothing for all the members of the household. She made the bread and dried the fruits for the Winter. She looked out for necessary provisions at opportune moments in a period when trading was much less developed than it is now.

The woman of the people or the housewife of moderate means, did all these things herself. Women of wealth learned to do them in girlhood and then superintended their doing by slaves or freed women. Especially in rich families, the mistress of the house could contribute much to the upbuilding or the downfall of the family, according to whether she was or was not capable in work, zealous in surveillance, energetic and effective in command, cautious in expenditure.

To-day, also, the woman of wealth may contribute much to the prosperity of the family, but her opportunity comes from a negative virtue, and even that not easy or common.—the knowing how not to spend too much. This illuminates facts we know of certain empresses, who, like Livia, directed in person and most zealously the looms in her palace, and explains why Augustus wore only home-made togas, woven under the eyes of his wife. The emperor and his spouse wished by their example to remind all Roman women of their duty to attend with diligence and energy to domestic administration and industry.

* * * * *

In short, matrimony in ancient times, although based on principles that seem tyrannical to us, presented some advantages, which compensated the men in part for scanty freedom of choice. The man, therefore, in the great changes of civilization that have created modern matrimony, have gained larger liberty on the one hand, and on the other lost certain advantages once assured by the closer and more vigorous family solidarity. Women, on the contrary, in passing from those days to these, have gained far more, since in exchange for increased opportunity they have suffered no loss.

The organization of the modern family is distinguished from the ancient particularly in being much more favorable to women. Feminists complain of the present status of women, but certain it is that at no other time have they been oppressed by men, or have they enjoyed so many advantages as now.

If the man had little freedom of choice in ancient marriage, the woman had not even the ghost of it. Moreover, the man had one other superiority; constrained to submit to the will of his father during the latter's lifetime, he, however, became absolute master of his wife on the father's death. He could repudiate her and marry another, as and when he would. This served him as part compensation for the previous state of submission in which he had been obliged to live.

For the woman there was no compensation whatever. While her father lived, she must marry the man he chose for her. When he was dead, she was in the hands of her husband, who could not only put her away at caprice, but also force her to marry another man. In Roman history especially, men used and abused this right after a fashion that at times seems to us ridiculous, at times revolting and always exaggerated. During the last century of the republic, when party struggles were hottest, the most noted political leaders made a habit of strengthening their alliances matrimonially.

However, the heaviest evils are never without some small measure of good. The sad situation of the Roman woman held one benefit that liberty has since removed. Whether beautiful or ugly, intelligent or foolish, attractive or indifferent, she was sure of being married, and that while still young. Her husband might not choose her, but she was sure to find him early.

In the ancient world there are to be found but slight traces of a feminine celibacy similar to that which formed later in convents under the influence of the Church, or like that which, from social and economic causes, apart from religious character and without need of monastic vows is forming itself to-day in the great industrial countries. It appears that once, in the upper and middle classes all the women not physically deformed or defective married.

Furthermore, since marriage was contracted for political and social motives, especially among the higher classes, attention was not centred on the beauty of the wife, but on the standing of her family. In speaking of the numerous notable personages of Rome, historians always tell us how many wives they married and to what families these belonged. Rarely do they say whether the women were beautiful or ugly, clever or stupid, pleasant or disagreeable, so inconsequent seemed such details. Among the few they excepted from this treatment is Livia, the last wife of Augustus. All the writers dilate upon her rare beauty—lauded also by statute—her wisdom, her intelligence and her virtue. But Livia seems to have been a marvelous woman.

In many States the legal age for marriage for both woman and man was much lower than it is now in Europe and America.

In itself this proceeding may appear only in good sense, but it is easily comprehensible. Love, always and everywhere, is a most indocile passion, and therefore more really controllable by the will and the cool discretion of older folk in girls at fourteen or fifteen years and boys of seventeen and eighteen, than in women and men of twenty and twenty-five. Naturally marriages so premature, made in part by inexperienced youth, were not wanting in grave dangers and inconveniences, but these seemed to contemporaries less serious than those which might arise if the young people were left free to follow their own devices.

* * * * *

The contrast between ancient and modern matrimony proves to us once more the complexity of human affairs, and the difficulty of giving them sound and absolute judgment. Certainly, something in the condition appears dreadful, the lot of a slave. We wonder how people like the Greeks and Romans, who arrived at a high degree of intellectual and moral development, could tolerate it. But regarding it more attentively, one realizes that even that institution, so evil in some respects, did not lack advantages.—a fact explaining, perhaps, why women tolerated it for so many centuries.

The freedom women to-day enjoy has infinite advantages, but it has made marriage a struggle, in which, though some triumph, others fail, and these who triumph are not always the best or the wisest.

The Freedom of the Modern Woman—Quite Different from the Woman of the Caesars.

THE RETURN OF DOSTOYEVSKY, THE CHAMPION OF SORROW—By Ivan Narodny

WHAT Shakespeare was for England, Goethe for Germany, Cervantes for Spain, Dante for Italy and Victor Hugo for France, that was Fyodor Mihailovitch Dostoyevsky for Russia. Ask an average educated Russian. "But how about Turgenieff and Tolstoy?" he would reply. "Oh, well, the one was too much a cosmopolitan, artist and aristocrat, the other too much of a moralist. But Dostoyevsky stands as the true mirror of all the Slavic racial character, passion, gloom, struggle, despair and agony."

"Not in Goethe's 'Faust,' or Shakespeare's 'Hamlet,' but in Dostoyevsky's 'Crime and Punishment' does one hear the woe of mankind take hold of us!" exclaimed George Brandes, the foremost literary critic of this century.

Not only is Dostoyevsky one of the greatest novelists of all the ages, but his own life is a terrible and unequalled drama in itself. Having fathomed the agony of Gethsemane, he also had felt the other agony of "Hamlet." Not in vain had he waited, stripped to his shirt, in the Semenovsky Square in St. Petersburg, on that cold and bleak 22d of December, for twenty minutes, trembling and half unconscious, the moment of execution. Not in vain had he suffered the imprisonment, chains, banishment to Siberia, labor and misery of the humiliation which he had undergone for his ideals of freedom. Dostoyevsky as a man and writer stood unique. There is no literary genius equal to him.

Over all his heroes and heroines hovers the mysterious, silent menace of St. Petersburg.

The horrible secrets of that city, oozing out of fetid cellars, escaping through gratings, permeating the very air and shadows of the luxurious and miserable structures—these are what poison the minds and bodies of most of Dostoyevsky's eccentric and sentimental characters. These are what make Raskolnikoff, the student dreamer, a murderer; Sonia, the poor girl, a street woman—one the hero, the other the heroine in his "Crime and Punishment." A glimpse of his "Recollections of a Dead House" is sufficient to give an idea of the horrible experiences of the author. Here are a few paragraphs of the Siberian convict's bathroom:

"Few of the convicts really washed themselves, as the common people care but little for soap, their idea of a bath consisting of getting up to the highest shelf, so as to stand the almost boiling heat of a steam bath, whipping themselves violently with a bundle of birch twigs and then pouring cold water on their backs.

"The shelves were covered with convicts. About fifty birch rods were in constant movement. Water was being continually thrown at the red hot stones of the stove until the heat became unbearable. All this mass of human bodies was swaying backward and forward, shouting and yelling and clanking their chains on the floor. Some were trying to cross the floor were caught in the chains of those who were sitting down, cursing and swearing.

"From time to time the moustached face of a soldier would peer in at the door or window to see if there were any disorders going on. The closely cropped pates and hot bodies of the convicts appeared to me more hideous than ever. Their backs were covered with scars from the lash of the stick, which stood out vividly on the red surface, and looked like so many fresh stripes. I could not help shuddering with horror at the sight of them. More water was thrown over the hot stones and a thick cloud of vapor rose from them, filling the whole bath-room to the floor, while maddening shrieks and sounds continued."

The writings of Dostoyevsky are nothing but inverted pictures of his own experience and soul. He was born in Moscow October 30, 1821, the second son of a retired military surgeon, and educated in the military engineering academy in St. Petersburg, which he left in 1844 with the grade of sub-lieutenant. Next year his father died and he resigned his commission in order to devote himself to literature—thus commencing a long struggle with bad health and poverty. Balzac, George Sand, Gogol, Pousskin and Dickens supplied him with literary ideals. He wrote as his first novel "Poor People," in which the influence of Dickens is strikingly noticeable in the manner of the treatment of his plot. The story was first published in "The Annals of the Country," edited by Krsevsky. Being wretchedly underpaid, he began to feel the grip of misery more and more. During 1847 he joined the revolutionary group of Petrachevsky, which advocated a vigorous education of peasants and the abolition of autocracy.

On the 23d of April, 1848, Dostoyevsky, with thirty other suspected personages, was arrested and confined in the Fortress of Sts. Peter and Paul, in St. Petersburg. Here he wrote the story, "A Little Hero." On the 22d of December, the same year, the accused were all condemned to death and conveyed in vans to a large scaffold especially erected on the Semenovsky Square. As the soldiers were preparing to carry out the sentence the prisoners were informed that their penalty was commuted to hard labor in Siberia. Dostoyevsky's sentence was four years at hard labor, and thereafter an enforced military service in the ranks for life.

His release and enlistment to the army subjected him only to fresh indignities as a common soldier at Semipalatinsk in 1854, through the intercession of an old school comrade, General Todtleben, he was made an under officer, and in 1859, upon the accession of Alexander II to the throne, he was finally pardoned and permitted to return to European Russia. In 1859 he had married the widow of a convict, Mme. Isaeff, with whom he did not live very happily, she being a woman with little education.

Arrived in St. Petersburg he took up writing. But the publishers and magazines paid him so little that he was always on the verge of starvation. In the Autumn of 1863 he left Russia for a journey abroad, on which occasion he visited the centres of civilization, but also the places of poverty and crime, which had always a great fascination for him. Arrived in Monaco, he was so absorbed in the game of roulette that he risked all the money he had and lost. This made of him a passionate gambler, although he never had any luck.

He went so far in his gambling that for weeks he could not write a page. In the hotel until his brother and his friend, Baron Wrangel, sent him the money to pay the debts. During this time he wrote "The Gambler," a curious short novel, which has much of his actual autobiography in its pages. It is an inmate study of roulette, with all the psychology of a gambler.

On April 25, 1864, his wife died, and soon thereafter his beloved brother, Mihail, and his best friend, Grigoriefl. Dostoyevsky found himself suddenly more forsaken and alone in a malignant world than he had been in Siberia.

"And here I am alone," he writes to Baron Wrangel. "I really feel afraid. My life is broken in two. On one side the past with its horrors, yet with great lessons; on the other the unknown future, without a single heart to replace the two that have left me. Literally there is no reason for me to live. To create new ties and to invent new life—the very thought of it fills me with horror."

In spite of all his misfortunes, the almost demoniac energy of the novelist persisted, and from this time on he began to write his novels and stories, of which "Crime and Punishment" is the crown of all his creations. Having mortgaged this novel, he was not able to finish it within the agreed time, and Stellovsky, the publisher, threatened him with imprisonment, from which he was saved by leaving Russia secretly and making his home in Germany. But the temptation of Monaco was so great that with the small sum of two hundred roubles he went there and lost it all. After he had landed on the street he wrote to Wrangel:

"I have spent everything. I am in debt at the hotel. I have no credit here and I feel myself in a most pitiable situation. I can neither pay my debts nor leave for Russia. What to do I do not know."

Here is a passage of Dostoyevsky's immortal "Crime and Punishment." Raskolnikoff, the hero, in thinking of his crime and soliloquizing:

"God! Am I to stand beating in her skull with a hatchet or something, wade in warm blood, break open the lock and rob and tremble, blood flowing all around, and hide myself, with the hatchet? Oh, God! is this indeed possible, and must it be?" He trembled like a leaf as he said this.

"What am I thinking of!" he cried in some astonishment. "I know well I could not endure that with which I have been torturing myself. I say that clearly yesterday when I tried to rehearse it. Perfectly plain. Then what am I questioning? Did I not say yesterday as I went up the stairs how disgusting and mean and low it all was, and did I not run away in terror?"

Yet a few days later he enters nervously the apartment of his friend:

"What is it you want? Who are you?" she asks.

"Pardon me, Elena Ivanovna, your old acquaintance, Raskolnikoff. I have brought a pledge, as I promised the other day. He speaks and holds out the packet to her. As she takes the packet from him without saying a word, he asked in anger:

"Why are you looking at me thus? Will you take it or not? I have no time to waste."

"Why are you so impatient old man? What is it?" she asks, glancing at the pledge.

While she begins to untie the packet and turns to the light, he opens his coat, self considered as his very best, depicting in Prince Myshkin, the hero, his own character. But the autumn of 1869 found him at the last gasp of penury in Dresden, where he was working on his novel. While he and his young wife was nursing their born daughter, whose christening had been postponed through want of money, the author had pawned the last piece of their linen to get a few roubles for food and bread for the mother. He wrote to his friend Maikoff:

"How can I possibly write when I am starving, when I am obliged to pawn my clothes in order to procure two thalers for a telegram? To the Devil with me and my hunger! But she is nursing her child, and she is going herself to pawn her last petticoat to-day!"

In response to Turgenieff's "Fathers and Sons," which created a great sensation within and outside of Russia, Dostoyevsky published "The Demon," which was published in 1871. Nearly all his late years he felt himself haunted by a demon, the ghost of an intellectual superman.

Dostoyevsky died January 31, 1881, and left a widow with two children. But since he was buried in St. Petersburg, no ruler, no genius of any kind has been more honored in Russia. It seemed as if all the nation felt that one of the greatest geniuses of the country had died—as if a great calamity had happened.

"Sonia was very agitated. But she was so happy that nothing could mar her joy. Seven years—only seven years! At the commencement of their happiness they were very far from it. These seven years as seven days. They did not know that a new life is not given for nothing; that it has to be paid dearly for, and only acquired by great labor and suffering and great future efforts.

"But now a new history commences; a story of the gradual renewing of a man of his slow progressive regeneration and change from one world to another—an introduction to hitherto unknown realities of life. This may well form the theme of a new tale; the one we wished to offer the reader is ended."

In 1868 Dostoyevsky married his stenographer, Anna Gregorievna Switkine, and began to prepare material for his next novel, "The Idiot," which the author himself considered as his very best, depicting in Prince Myshkin, the hero, his own character. But the autumn of 1869 found him at the last gasp of penury in Dresden, where he was working on his novel. Gov. Robert P. Bass on "The Forgotten Man"

GOVERNOR ROBERT P. BASS OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, EDITOR OF TODAY'S SUNDAY AMERICAN.

THE progressive movement has for its object the strengthening of our present government and its adaption to the great economic changes that are taking place so that it may again be made the agent for ideal democracy.

It is not a project to establish the millennium; and yet it represents an effort practically to put into effect some of the ideals of democracy.

It strives to give men an equal opportunity to benefit by the product of their labor and their intellect; to insure for all men the same justice before the courts, and then gradually to make the law change the emphasis from PROPERTY RIGHTS to HUMAN RIGHTS.

It teaches, among other things, that money is not the highest aim in life or the controlling force in government. It is an effort to restore the faith of the people in that which they themselves created, in order that they may not destroy it.

Whence did this movement spring and what cause gave it birth?

It can undoubtedly be accounted for by the changed conditions which resulted from the economic evolution of the last twenty-five years, conditions which called for a somewhat radical change, not only in the body politic, but in the machinery of government itself.

Strangely enough the moving force for this movement has come from the ranks, rather than from the leaders themselves. That is the reason why any genuine and sincere appeal directly to the voters for change and action looking to such advance and progress has usually been supported by them.

The difficulty lies in keeping the issue clear and clean cut in the public mind. The old school politicians are adepts at befogging an issue or diverting attention from the real question at stake to some unimportant but striking incident which they manufacture or trot out at the critical moment.

For this reason IT IS ALWAYS DANGEROUS FOR THE PROGRESSIVES TO COMPROMISE WITH THEIR OPPONENTS. When a principle is involved it is absolutely fatal. Their only way to succeed is to get out into the open, avoid all trades, hew close to the line, have every thing out and above board, then strike from the shoulder and fight hard.

It is the average man who has suffered and paid the cost of the old-fashioned political manipulation which resulted from a partnership between the bosses and "big business."

The progressive movement is the means through which a great body of citizens are seeking relief from conditions which they know to be unjust and contrary to the best interest of society as a whole. It is the most staple, the most responsible and virile element in our country which is endeavoring by this means, gradually, lawfully and in an orderly manner, to change certain undesirable conditions of government.

The trouble originally started from the fact that most of us have been so wholly occupied with our own private affair that we paid little or no attention to political questions.

This occurrrd at a time when the government was rapidly extending its functions to bear directly, or indirectly, on the business life and occupations of almost every citizen.

There was, however, among us a certain group of men, of exceptional ability in the administration and execution of affairs, who undertook from time to time to obtain special favors from some branch of the government, whether in a city, State or in the nation.

They were usually successful and we, being so entirely occupied with our own affairs, paid no attention to their activities.

As the functions of government became extended, these same directors of big business found that political influence became of ever-increasing importance to their enterprises, particularly if they aimed to pay large extra dividends.

And so it became their ambition to establish a governing class, of which the highly specialized princes of business and finance were to be the head, with the professional bosses acting as their lieutenants in the field.

Accordingly the politics of many a city and many a State came to be controlled by such a combination, with an unseen and unnamed power furnishing the munitions of war and drafting the general plans of campaign; and the little bosses, whether in country, town or city ward, each faithfully and blindly executing his small part of those plans.

It was not half as difficult as it would at first seem. Every man who had any political ambition, however humble, came to know almost by instinct that, if he co-operated obediently in this general plan of campaign, his way would be made easy, but that if he demurred, objected or even questioned, obstacles to his advancement would spring up at every turn.

Consequently, for a long time almost all the lesser politicians followed the lines of least resistance; and so it came to be the acknowledged function of the local control the local caucus and to provide delegates to the boss to command a certain number of votes in order to county, senatorial, congressional, or State convention, who would obediently carry out the wishes of those "higher up."

He maintained his hold on a certain number of voters by looking after them in time of need, by placing them under obligations through the distribution of small patronage, or by granting other special considerations which were made available to him through his superiors in the political and financial world.

For a long time the average citizen never attended the caucuses. HE DID NOT KNOW OR CARE WHAT WAS TAKING PLACE.

Consequently a small handful of voters would, when the word was sent down, deliver enough delegates from the towns and wards to nominate any man desired for the Legislature, for Congress or for Governor.

In most instances this was done without corruption and with the greatest of ease, but where a hard fight developed, and it was necessary on account of discipline to make an example, the funds were always available and were used in such a manner as to produce the desired results.

This sort of an organization knew no party. It really was a BUSINESS proposition. In Democratic districts it was Democratic, elsewhere it was loyally Republican.

voters were whipped into line by appeal to PARTY LOYALTY. This sort of thing means of course the prostitution of any party that allowed itself to be so used.

The whole system of political control was ultimately worked out on the basis of BUSINESS EFFICIENCY. But the efficiency was measured, not by the BENEFIT it conferred on the community at large, but by the SERVICE RENDERED the organizers.

Very naturally and very properly, only that party can survive which shall purge and free itself of that manipulation which makes it the tool or business agent of any small group of powerful men.

But, after all, these great business organizers, who from the quiet seclusion of their offices have secretly exercised such a tremendous influence over our government, have been actuated by motives which were not wholly bad.

> The power behind the progressive movement has sprung very largely from an appeal to the hitherto FORGOTTEN MAN; the average voter, who is also the consumer; the man who expresses his views once a year or once in two years at the polls, and is then silent; the man who is never represented by a highly paid lobby before the Legislature or at Congress. I say "THE FORGOTTEN MAN," because as soon as a candidate is once elected as a delegate, or as a representative, or to Congress, he seems in some strange way to forget the opinions he has voiced and the promises he has made to induce people to vote for him. He thinks no more of his constituents, and seems to forget how they feel, until he again seeks their support.

In the first place, they had a full appreciation and confidence in their own ability, and to give the people the benefit of this higher intelligence in matters of government was to their minds conferring a distinct favor, even though the people themselves FAILED TO APPRECIATE IT or questioned their motives.

The fundamental difficulty, however, lay in the fact that "big business" is so highly specialized that it can consider or see a question of government, or of the public welfare, only from the point of view of its bearing on "big business" itself. To its representatives a public measure is desirable, or otherwise, merely in proportion as it seems beneficial or detrimental to that group of interests which happen to be effected by its passage or defeat.

And the fact that these interests are highly organized and keenly interested meant that, under the old system, those measures which they seriously disapproved always failed at some stage of their progress.

We should remember that this progressive movement which has developed in American politics during the last decade does not spring exclusively from any one party.

Although the insurgent Republican Senators and members of the House of Representatives have borne the brunt of the fight in Congress, yet are there many instances of progressive Democrats leading in the different States and in the nation.

This is true because the progressives of all parties are striving fundamentally for the same things.

The means which they advocate may differ, but their underlying purposes do not.

Furthermore, they are confronted in all parties by the same difficulties—an element in their midst which takes part in and sometimes controls their party councils and which is vitally opposed to the basic purposes they have in view.

Behind this reactionary element in all parties lies the common enemy of the progressive movement, an enemy which owes allegiance to no party, but strives to attach itself like a leach to whichever is in power and to suck from its substance as many favors as it may.

The progressive movement has been confronted with INNUMERABLE DIFFICULTIES. The means by which it has sought to advance its principles have been simple and comparatively few: PUBLICITY, EDUCATION, DIRECT APPEAL TO THE VOTERS AND THE PASSAGE OF LAWS WHICH PLACE THE PEOPLE IN CONTROL OF, AND MAKE THEM RESPONSIBLE FOR, THEIR GOVERNMENT.

The very laws which they have advocated, such as the direct primary, the initiative and referendum, have in themselves provided the best known schools for educating the electorate, in order that it may be fitted to meet the responsibilities which those laws place upon their shoulders.

The power behind the progressive movement has sprung very largely from an appeal to the hitherto FORGOTTEN MAN; the average voter, who is also the consumer; the man who expresses his views once a year or once in two years at the polls, and is then silent; the man who is never represented by a highly paid lobby before the Legislature or at Congress.

I say THE FORGOTTEN MAN, because as soon as a candidate is once elected as a delegate, or as a representative, or to Congress, he seems in some strange way to forget the opinions he has voiced and the promises he has made to induce people to vote for him.

For a time he comes less and less in contact with the men and women he represents.

He thinks no more of his constituents, and seems to forget how they feel, until he again seeks their support. In striking contrast is the system which seeks to control legislation and which immediately surrounds this man with an entirely different atmosphere.

The lobby and those politicians engaged to create sentiment for or against a measure or a man envelope him in the Legislature, or at a convention, with their insidious influence.

Unless he is an exceptionally strong man, it all has its effect.

Little by little his point of view is changed, and he gradually comes to believe that one must promise some rather wild things in order to be elected, but fortunately need not live up to these promises after election.

So THE MAN WHO CASTS THE BALLOT gradually comes to be THE FORGOTTEN MAN.

HE IT IS WHOM THE PROGRESSIVES REPRESENT.

It is to him they appeal for support.

Married Life the 15th Week

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

NOTE—In all stories you read of "Married Life in the Nineteenth Year," "Why I Left My Home," and all that sort of thing, you never hear of the poor husband. Perhaps he is too busy to write; perhaps nobody cares about him anyway. Here for the first time we have a husband giving his views of married life in the way so many women have been doing of late.

By ROBERT SHERBERT TURNER.

IF any bachelor reads this autobiography of mine he doubtless wonders at the note of sadness that creeps into the melody of married life.

I used to be the same way myself. To me, at that time, married life seemed one grand sweet song with nothing to interrupt it. Both feet were on the soft pedal all the time.

The bachelor never sees a girl in a bad temper. If the ice cream falls on the carpet she laughs and makes jolly remarks while she's scraping it up with a spoon. If the butcher didn't bring the steak she beats it out to the delicatessen store and gives him a spread of cold ham, potato salad and pickles that tastes better than anything he ever had, when accompanied by a lot of jollying about "camping out," "roughing it," and so forth.

Perhaps the bachelor steps on the girl's skirt and tears a chunk out of it. How sweetly the girl protests that it was an old skirt; that it looks better without the lace; that she was going to rip it off anyway.

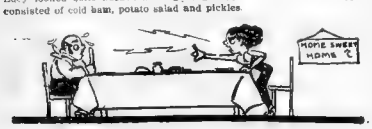
No wonder the bachelor thinks that it's impossible to get in a fight with a girl—that all girls are made, as the old rhyme says, of sugar and spice and everything nice.

As I have remarked, I used to be of the same opinion

But not any more.

So far as my married experience goes there is nothing in the world over which a woman can't get up a fight.

Last night I went home at the usual hour. It was terribly hot and Lucy looked quite flushed after getting supper ready. It—the supper—consisted of cold ham, potato salad and pickles.



"You needn't look contemptuously at the supper," began Lucy the moment I sat down. "It's too hot to stick over a stove cooking a big meal, and,anyway, it's bad for you to eat too much in the hot weather. You're getting too fat anyway, and I just hate fat people I think it ought to be grounds for the annulment of a marriage that a man looks slim when he's all togged up marrying a girl, and afterwards when he comes home and takes his coat off and sprawls all over the Morris chair he looks like an equatorial hippopotamus. And anyway it'll do you no good to sneer at the supper because it's all you're going to get."

"My dear"—— I began.

"You can't insult me by your grouchy looks and then try to make it up just by saying 'my dear!' "

"But, my dear"——

"There you go again. I suppose you've been spending your week's carfare on a mad jamboree uptown somewhere and you want to borrow some more from me."

"My dear, I couldn't get on much of a jamboree on sixty cents, no matter how much I wanted to."

"No matter how much you want to.' Do you mean to sit there and tell me to my face that you want to go on a wild jamboree, as you call it in your vulgar slang."

"Now, look here, my dear"——

"'Wild jamboree,' indeed. No, sir, you shall never get a dime out of me to spend on wild jamborees. You ought to be ashamed of yourself for even mentioning such things in my presence."

"But, my dear"——

"No, you can't make any excuse now. Your vulgarity cannot be atoned for just by 'my dearing' me

"My dear, I just wanted"——

"You 'just wanted!'. Of course, you 'just wanted' something. I knew that the moment you came in and began that honeyfugling stuff You might have fooled me once, but I'm too wise now."

"I just wanted to say"——

"Oh, for goodness sake, you're always wanting to say something. The minute you get home you begin to criticize and you never stop until you fall asleep snoring in the Morris chair."

I just wanted to say that in this hot weather"——

You just wanted to say," snapped Lucy, "that in this hot weather you suffer terribly in the office. No wonder, if you fill yourself up with gin rickeys with that Jim Hicks. I suppose I don't feel the heat, banging over a hot stove every day cooking your supper."

"I just wanted to say that in this hot weather you should run down to the seaside for a month."

"I thought you were 'my dearing' me for something," said Lucy. "You want to get me out of the way while you have some of your 'wild jamborees,' probably in this very house."

"I could go with you, my dear."

"You could go with me!' I knew there was something selfish about your little plan But I'll watch you. You shan't flirt with any bathing girls if I know it."

And in this amiable way we decided upon our vacation

Lew Dockstader's Uncle Jawge

NOW my Uncle Jawge is the most universalist man what ever lived. He can do anything, but he never does. And he says anything, and expects you to support him. 'I've been supportin' him ever since I married his niece three years ago.

Uncle Jawge has two sides to his character—a liberal side and a close side. On his close side, he could climb all the way up the outside of the Singer Building with an armful of eels, and never miss a eel. Believe me, that's some close.

And on his liberal side, he heard that Tom Sharkey had his scab barkeepers fired, and so he got hold of one of them, stood him up behind a bar and said, "Now here, if you're gonna learn this bar business you can't consider yourself qualified unless your ability's been passed on by a competent judge. So you start in and mix all the drinks, and I'll drink 'em, and pass on 'em, and if they ain't right you'll have to remix 'em and I'll have to redrink 'em." Well, they got along fine until the barkeep ran out o' cherries and began slippin' in cranberries in the cocktails. Then Uncle Jawge soured, an' would have walked out right there, but he couldn't, Finally, Uncle Jawge called for an Andralaska highball, and the barkeep gave him carbolic acid

When Uncle Jawge came around next day, the bar keep asked him how he liked the Andralaska special

"Fine, but every time I coughed I burnt my whiskers."

I thought that if Uncle Jawge kep' that up all week he'd burn up all over, so I asked him while the time was ripe whether he would rather be cremated or go to Woodlawn. He said, "I don't want to be burnt up to no cinder, and neither do I desire to be et up by worms; when I die jest pour me back into the bottle."

An' that ain't all. Last week there was four months' rent due on our villa, an' I had just come home with the money in my pocket to pay the landlord. It was dark when I got there, and the furniture was all on the wagon, an' rubber shoes on the horse. I said, "We don't need to move, Uncle Jawge; I got the rent money right here, to give to the landlord." He said, "Hush, boy, I got the goods on the wagon, and the shoes on the hoss and it's dark, and if we're ever goin' to move, now is the time!"

"But," I said, "what will the new landlord think when he sees the rubber shoes on the hoss?" An' it wasn't rainin', and it was,too dark to play tennis. Uncle Jawge said, "Nemmine 'bout that; you give that four months' rent to the landlord where we're goin' to, and there'll be no foolish questions asked."

Uncle Jawge is what they call a faddist. He's got all kinds of fads. One of 'em's meutel telepathy. I don't think that would be a good thing for the country. Imagine a man with a homely wife taking her to a Ziegfeld show, and imagine her reading his thoughts the minute the chorus comes on. That man's life would not be worth a minus quantity. When mental telepathy comes in, love is sure gonna fly out the window. That shows just about where love gets off. Love is a foolish feeling that comes over you just previous to matrimony and leaves you immediately after. It makes a brainy man go out and buy gumdrops for a big husky woman who would a lot rather have a plug o' tobacco

Now down on our farm—Uncle Jawge is a great farmer—he got a cow and a wooden stool the other day, and Uncle Jawge went out and tried to milk her. I followed him in a little while and went down to see how he was gettin' on. There he was. It looked like he was tryin' to do the turkey trot with the cow, and Uncle Jawge was cussin' and yellin' worse'n I ever heard. I said, "What's the matter with Jaws, Uncle Jawge; didn't you milk her?" "Milk her?" he says, "Hell's her? Why I can't even get her to sit down on the stool

But that ain't all. We had trouble with our chickens, too. First we had a rooster, named Big Bill; there's a watch named after him—but he wouldn't go, so we led him to the guillotine and got another whose name was Brigham Young. Well, ever since Brigham got his eyes on them chickens we've had more fine eatin' eggs than we could use.

Raymond Hitchcock's Burglar.

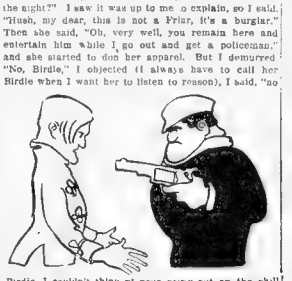
I HAD, oh, the most terrible, calamitous, catastrophical thing happen to me the other night. I was so scared that I have felt myself walking almost right through death's door ever since

I woke up right in the centre of the night, and there was a terrible, ferocious-looking burglar bending right over me. I shook like a fish, and said, "Oh, sir, do spare me, and I'll forgive and forget everything." He said, "Fifty dollars or your life." I said, "I'm fearfully sorry, but the smallest I have is a hundred dollar bill." Then he said, "Never mind, I'll change it."

Suddenly he turned around, and when he wasn't looking I slipped my hand under the pillow and drew my revolver and pointed it right straight at him. When he saw that he just held up his hand with a warning gesture, and said, "Stop! I'll have you arrested for carrying concealed weapons." I realized right away that he had it on me, so I said, "Horrors! that's right, I never thought of that."

I saw at once that I must get rid of that revolver, so, awaiting my chance, I just slipped it right into the burglar's pocket, a brilliant piece of strategy, which I thought was quite discerning on my part.

Just then my wife woke up, and said, "Raymond," she said, "how dare you, how dare you bring home one of those ruffianly club members of yours at this hour of the night?" I saw it was up to me to explain, so I said, "Hush, my dear, this is not a Friar, it's a burglar." Then she said, "Oh, very well, you remain here and entertain him while I go out and get a policeman," and she started to don her apparel. But I demurred "No, Birdie," I objected (I always have to call her Birdie when I want her to listen to reason), I said, "no



Birdie, I couldn't think of your going out on the chill streets at this hour to look for a cop, and besides, you'd have to go into a saloon, and that's inelegant."

So Birdie said, "Raymond, I guess you're right. You go out and get the cop, and I'll stay here and sing to the burglar while you're gone." So I put on my dress suit and went bravely into the night. Well, what do you think? No sooner had I gained the sidewalk than I found myself face to face with a large, round policeman—Officer 966, he was (that's an ad. for our show now playing at the Gaiety Theatre, you know)—well, as soon as I had recovered from the awful shock and surprise of seeing the policeman, I looked him straight in the eye, and said, "Come with me, my good man. There's a burglar in my house about to make way with all my chattels."

But the officer said, "Gray! Describe said Burglar." So I said, "Officer, you're right. Please pardon me for interrupting you on your evening walk. I'll return and can assure you that the burglar will have no further trouble."

Well, I returned to the house, and there I found the burglar holding hands with my wife, and he said, "Hey, bo!" mind you, the audacious familiarity of the person, calling me boy, "Hey, bo," he said "I'm getting tired of this delay. I'm going to take your stuff and wish you a Merry Christmas."

Just then an extraordinary thing happened. The dark form of a man was silhouetted at the further window. The man saluted. Both gave the secret sign. The burglar turned to me and said, "Gee, but you're a lucky guy; you're the luckiest guy I know." I said, disdainfully, "What! Me a lucky guy? Me, all of whose goods and whose wife's goods you have so unmercifully purloined, a lucky guy. Get out of here, you brute, or I'll forget myself."

The burglar dropped everything he had, and said, "Peace, man!" as he disappeared out of the window, "The burglars have struck, and I've been called out!"

Oh, Behave!

A YOUNG lady, visiting in the country for the first time, was alarmed at the approach of a cow. She was too frightened to run, and shaking her parasol at the animal, she said in a very stern tone "Lie down, sir; lie down!"

Vice Versa.

A FARMER went into a hardware store and while purchasing some tools was asked by the proprietor if he did not want to buy a bicycle?

"A bicycle won't eat its head off," said the man, "and you can ride around your farm on it They're cheap now and I can let you have one for thirty-five dollars."

"I'd rather put the thirty-five dollars in a cow," replied the farmer

"Oh, well," said the hardware man, sarcastically, "you'd look almighty foolish riding round your farm on a cow, now, wouldn't you?"

"No more foolish, perhaps,' said the farmer, "than I would milking a bicycle."

Foresight.

DONALD was ill, and his friend Donald took a bottle of whiskey to him. Donald gave the invalid one glass and said

"Ye'll get anither one in the morrin."

About five minutes elapsed, and then Donald suddenly exclaimed

Servants Do, Frequently

MRS SUTTON advertised for a woman to do general housework, and in answer a colored girl called, announcing that she had come for the position

Are you a good cook?" asked Mrs Sutton

"No, indeed; I don't cook," was the reply.

"Are you a good laundress."

"I wouldn't do washin' and ironin'; it's too hard on the hands"

"Can you sweep? asked Mrs Sutton

"No," was the positive answer. "I'm not strong enough"

"Well," said the lady of the house, quite exasperated, "may I ask what you can do?"

"I dusts," came the placid reply.

Making Himself at Home.

DORIS was radiant over a recent addition to the family, and rushed out of the house to tell the news to a passing neighbor.

"Oh, you don't know what we've got upstairs!"

"What is it"

"It's a new baby brother" and she settled back upon her heels and folded her hands to watch the effect.

You don't say so! Is he going to stay?"

"I guess so" very thoughtfully. "He's got his things off

Was Getting Nervous.

A MAN whose trousers bagged badly at the knees was standing on a corner waiting for a car. A passing Irishman stopped and watched him with great interest for two or three minutes; at last he said:

Not the Dangerous End.

LITTLE Bobby was pulling the dog's tail, when his aunt said: "You mustn't do that, Bobby; he will bite you."

What It Really Was.

"Go on, nigh,a', dat ain't shoe blackin'; dat's ma manicure cream!"

She Would Talk.

A PROMINENT motor racer was asked by a friend if he would be so kind as to allow three young women to accompany him while he was trying out a new racing car.

"Why, I can't be bothered with passengers at a time like that, and especially with women. They always talk to me and I can't have my mind distracted. It might prove dangerous, you know."

"But these girls won't bother you. I'll tell them not to. One of them is my sister. They are crazy to go; want to say they have ridden with you You know how girls are."

"Well, if you will tell them they mustn't speak to me while I am driving, they may go. They mustn't move around, or do anything to distract my attention. You impress this upon them. If they are willing to do this they can go."

The promise was made and they started. At one place the driver ran over a waterguard and there was a tremendous bump. He did not try to look around, as he was going at a rapid rate of speed, but presently he felt a timid touch on his shoulder.

"What is it?" he growled

A weak little voice answered him: "Really, I hate awfully to bother you I know I shouldn't and I promised not to; but I feel I must tell you that Helen isn't with us now."

ADVENTURES OF THE HUNTERS

A Thrilling Account of the Hunter Family Hunting a Summer Resort—in Ten Palpitating Chapters.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTER.

MRS. HUNTER, having gone to the mountains because her husband picked the shore, quits that resort because the guests think her mountain climbing dress is a Texas Tommy costume. They hie to the beach.

CHAPTER II.

"SO this is Splashmore Beach, is it?" asked Mr. Hunter, as he helped his wife and son off the O. Pauk & Cold Molasses Railroad train at a little station about the size of a piano box.

"Now, John, don't commence to knock the place until you have seen it," warned Mrs. Hunter.

"Well, you are evidently right, Fanny, it is one of those places."

"What places?" she asked, suspiciously.

"Why, I merely asked if this were Splashmore Beach and you accused me of knocking it, so I take it for granted it is one of those dumps where the mere mention of its name is a knock"——

"Ma, where's the beach?" asked Willie.

"Splashmore Beach?" asked a tired-looking colored boy.

"Where is it?" asked Hunter.

"Ah'll drive you all there," said the boy.

"I thought it was near the station," said Mrs. Hunter.

"'Bout haf er mile," said the boy, so they climbed into the carryall and were driven to the Splashmore House. Finally they sighted, over the grass-fringed edge of a sand dune, the sparkle of water.

"Ah, smell the glorious and invigorating salt breeze," gurgled Mrs. Hunter.

"That thar's th' cannin' fact'ry you all smell," explained the boy, whipping up the horse.

"And what may that be?" asked Mrs. Hunter.

"It may be where they can attar-of roses, but I'll bet seven million dollars against a porous plaster it isn't," said Hunter.

"You all's right, sah, bit's where they cans clams an' them in shells what's busted lays outen th' sun and sorter smells. That's th' Splashmore," and the colored boy pointed to a rather gaudy house in the midst of a colony of smaller cottages and odd-shaped buildings.

At dinner the Hunters were served puree of clams, fries clams, clam patties, clam chowder and some other things scattered through the menu.

"I love clams," said Mrs. Hunter.

"They probably get the second-handed ones here from the factory," said Hunter, and they wandered outside.

"Oh, let us go down on the beach and wander about the pure white sands and see the waves come rolling in from the deep blue sea," said Mrs. Hunter.

A short walk brought them to the shore.

"It looks like a lake," said Hunter.

"It's a bay shet in by them headlands," explained a fisherman.

"Where's the sand, Ma, where's the sand?" asked Willie.

"If you drive six miles around to the north'ard of that headland, there's as fine a beach as you could ask for," said the fisherman.

Hunter looked at the shore. It was made up of rocks, mud flats, eel grass, broken lobster pots, bottles and other junk. Little landings sloped down to where all sorts of scows were tied. Willie had taken off his shoes and stockings and ran out on one of the little landings when zip! presto! he shot off into the water.

Such a bawling as he put up scared the natives, but he was merely frightened. He stuck in the mud, about waist deep in water.

"Willie Hunter, come right out of that!" commanded his mother.

"Ow-wow wow!" replied Willie.

"Go help him out, John. Willie, how could you? And just a nice, clean sailor suit," and Mrs. Hunter pranced about angrily.

"You should have put on his diving suit, Fanny," said Hunter, grinning, and he walked out on the little sloping landing, reached out his hand and proceeded to help Willie out of the mud.

The landing was slippery with ancient lobster bait and other things. Willie was frantic and pulled his father's arms with all his might, and then Hunter's feet slipped. With a wild "YOW!" he slid off into the water.

Mrs. Hunter looked frightened for a moment, then she saw Hunter lift Willie up on the landing and she leaned back against one of the little scantling poles that braced the landing and laughed long and loud.

Hunter climbed up, dripping mud and slime from his armpits down.

"You have such a poor sense of humor, John," laughed Mrs. Hunter, "if you only knew how funny you looked with eel grass and mud all over your white flannel trousers and white canvas shoes, you are just the funniest sl-E-E-E A H! HEL"——

There was a snapping sound and a succulent splash and Mrs. Hunter's frantic appeal for help was cut off in the middle for good and sufficient reasons. The pole she had been leaning against broke and let her do a backward dive into the muddy water. If she sounded the "p" on that word "help" she did it under water.

In an instant she was on her feet. Hunter started to wade out to her when he saw she was all right. Instead, he waded to the landing, sat down on it, and laughed so long and loud that the natives were frightened.

"I'd go right back home this minute if I could pack these dirty clothes," declared Mrs. Hunter, an hour later, when, in new clothes, she was trying to find some woman to wash out the others. She had just begun speaking to her husband. It took her an entire hour to forgive him for laughing at her. She explained that she could understand why it was all right for her to laugh at him because he was a man, but no gentleman would laugh at his poor, dear, tender and defenseless wife, and if he didn't stop instantly she would bang him right over the head with the morris chair!

"And we've got to stay here another whole day before I can get our clothes washed and ironed," complained Mrs. Hunter.

"Well, I thought you wanted to go to the beach," said Hunter.

"I did," snapped his wife, "but I hope you don't call this a beach."

"I wanted to go down to Sandhurst, where there's a real beach, but you insisted coming here because the name 'Splashmore' sounded so cool and nice. This is no beach"——

"Well, for goodness sake, don't I know it? Now we won't be fooled another time. I've got all the Summer resort guides there are, I guess; they are in my trunk. We will look up a nice place."

"Beach or mountain?" asked Hunter.

"Neither, we'll be sensible and go to a nice, cool, handsome farm, where there is quiet, and nanesome sunsets, and fresh cream, and the kine coming home with tinkling bells, and fresh vegetables, and everything lovely."

"Sounds nice," he replied, "but I rather go to some fresh water lake resort where there's fishing and boating and"——

The next day the Hunters, bag and baggage, were en route to Fernecroft Farms.

Brawls of a Summer Boarder

(Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

A FARMER in Sullivan County is so ambitious that he will not permit anything to take him from his work. When he wants to light his pipe he has fleas trained to alight on the tobacco and sit there until it becomes ignited.

A farmer in Erie County claims he has the deepest well on earth, or rather in earth. Occasionally he finds in his bucket chop-sticks, laundry checks and other things which prove that the bucket must touch the Flowery Kingdom.

It doesn't add much to your comfort, when you are sleeping up in the garret and the rain is dripping onto your bed through the holes in the roof, to have a boarder with a voice like the sound of an elephant's snore standing by the old-fashioned organ in the dining room singing "Asleep in the Deep."

A nicely coiled rope in the room of a boarding house is not always put there to be used in case of fire. Sometimes, when you stop to think of the meals you are getting and the price you are paying for them, you feel inclined to hang yourself.

A boarding house farmer will frequently remark with pride that his ancestors were great men. He goes into a dark, musty room for some of their photographs, and then by mistake brings forth, instead of the old family album, a book entitled "Noted Pirates." And to make matters worse, he does not so much as blush at his mistake.

Every boarding house serves a poor meal Saturday night, for when you get a chance to complain about it the next day you are confronted by an elegant Sunday meal, and then you think it pretty small business to complain, and forget about it.

There is a stream in Greene County so crooked that only cross-eyed fish can swim through it.

The Truth Tellers

(Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

(Ten young men and ten young women agreed to always tell the truth, regardless of results or of whose feelings they hurt.)

CHAPTER VI

"ALTHOUGH," exclaimed D'Aubleigh Pinxt, the artist, to Miss Lotta Pifferpiota, the novelist, "although we are both members of the 'Truth Tellers' Association,' I still say, without fear of losing my membership, that you are the most beautiful girl in all the world."

"Oh, D'Aubleigh," simpered Lotta, "it is so splendid of you to say that. And I, too, can declare, without fear of violating my promise of membership, that I know you are the handsomest and best man in all the world."

"Let us begin being quite frank and truthful with each other," suggested D'Aubleigh.

"Oh, yes, let us," gurgled Lotta. "Now I will begin by telling you what I think about your paintings and you may tell me what you think about my novels. That will be fine. Now, that picture of the giant trees and bit of lake, really, there is something about it that seems stilted, or too set, and yet, I am so reminded of a Corot."

"A-hem, well, you ARE brutally frank and truthful, aren't you?" said D'Aubleigh, flushing. "However, let me assure you it is entirely original and that Corot never painted a landscape that at all resembled this scene. As to your novels, dear, your last one—the one you called 'Because'—seems so trite and so prolix and dull, and yet there is something about the plot that reads as natural to me as though I had written it myself, or had read a plot just like it. And——"

"Why, D'Aubleigh," protested Lotta, red with suppressed anger, "there's nothing trite in it, it is not prolix, it is just full of sparkling conversation and wonderful situations, and as for the plot, it is absolutely and entirely and honestly original!"

And right here they separated, Lotta going to her room to destroy a certain novel by Helena Flynn, while D'Aubleigh, as soon as Lotta had gone, rushed to a corner of his studio, wrapped up a small but priceless Corot he had borrowed from a lady friend and took it back to her.

At the same time the membership in the "Truth Tellers' Association," which at the outset had been twenty, was now reduced to eight.

Further Adventures of Harold Hangover

By William F. Kirk

CHAPTER VII.

THE July sun was mercilessly hot, and the humidity was awful, even for New York City, a centre noted for its humidity.

A tall, freckle-faced youth was walking slowly toward the Polo Grounds. It was high noon, and the sun was just getting to a point directly in the centre of its skyline. Waves of heat rose above the apartment buildings on Elgah avenue, shimmering waves that reminded Harold of the heat waves he had seen years before over the parched pastures just outside Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

Yes, indeed, it was none other than Harold Hangover, the famous inventor of the "sneeze ball." His step was light, even buoyantly so, for Manager McGraw had removed his stern ban, and had told Harold that he need go into the box no longer except with the perfect right to pitch to win. Pitching to lose deliberately was a stunt that the proud spirit of Harold Hangover could not longer stagger under, though staggering was not unknown to the Great Oshkosh pitcher.

"I am going in there to win today," he said to himself. "Just think of it—going in to win, going in to win, going in to win."

The words seemed to arrange themselves to music in our hero's brain, and as he tripped along toward One Hundred and Fifty-sixth street he paid no attention to anything else.

Crash.

The unfortunate accident had come about. A splendid, high-power touring car had rolled over Harold Hangover as easily as the steam roller flattened the king of all the bronco busters, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt.

The car, driven by an exceptionally tall, stringy person, came to a halt and returned to the scene of the accident. Tender hands lifted our hero into the car, and the owner, Richard Marquard, gave the wheel to his chauffeur and sat in the back seat holding the limp form of the wonderful pitcher from Wisconsin.

How long Harold remained in a comatose condition he never knew. When the glare of the afternoon sun opened his eyelids he looked up into the kindly face of the famous southpaw, whose marvelous record, for the 1912 season had set all the baseball world talking.

"Where am I?" he asked in a bewildered manner.

"You are here," replied Richard Marquard, stroking Harold's brow with his pitching glove, which he always wore when he was out automobiling, so everybody would know Marquard still lived. "You are here and in safe hands."

"What made you run over me?" asked Harold Hangover, when he recognized the face above his. "I never done nothing to you. Ain't it enough that you are all the time winning baseball games? Do you have to get extra fame by running over the greatest right-handed pitcher that ever lived? I got a notion to punch you in the jaw right now. If I should happen to start one from my kneecap and finish in the neighborhood of your jaw you wouldn't win any more games from now on. What made you run over me?" Harold's manner was now distinctly turbulent.

"Maybe I wanted to," answered the sensational left-hander. "I was thinking just before I got to you that a few bush-leaguers here and there wouldnt make the world any poorer for their absence, so I gave you the work. I didn't mean to hurt you seriously, though," concluded Marquard, with a look of real concern. "I never killed anybody in my life, and I should hate to start in now."

With a snarl of rage, Harold Hangover, no longer able to stand the smug smile of the great Marquard, dashed his right fist full into the face leering above him. It was a well-meant blow, but our hero was weak from the shock of his accident, and Marquard was not seriously injured. Seizing Harold Hangover by the neck he flung the great Oshkosh pitcher from the car.

Fortunately for Harold, the ejecting process took place immediately in front of the press gate at the Polo Grounds, and so great was the force with which he had been thrown from the car that he rolled through this gate and almost to the clubhouse proper before he could rise.

"I will be avenged, he whispered to himself in his quiet way. "Nothing can stop me now, Mr. Marquard will live to regret this rash deed!"

WERE YOU SHOPPING LATE?

If your Picture is Here

Come and Get $5.00!

Vindicated—beyond the shadow of a doubt!

That is the result of the AMERICAN'S evidence submitted in defence of Boston women's "style."

When New York women accused Boston women of being "frumps" in the matter of dress, the AMERICAN accepted the task of proving or disproving this charge.

The AMERICAN'S photographers have been assigned for some weeks past to "cover" the shopping district on the first three days of each week and to snap photographs, at random, of Boston women shoppers as they pursued their diligent search for bargains.

Hundreds of pictures have been taken in this way. Many of these have been printed in the AMERICAN, both daily and Sunday, with the positive result of proving conclusively that not only are Boston women Not "frumps" but that "Boston is the most truly fashionable city in the country."

The evidence is in and with the publication of pictures on this page, the case is closed as far as the AMERICAN is concerned.

The women whose pictures appear on this page today are invited to call at the AMERICAN Promotion Dept., No. 5 Winthrop square, and each will receive $5.00 for their trouble. Any others whose pictures have been printed and who have not called for the $5.00 award are requested to do so without delay, as this is the last day's presentation of evidence.

Society and Foreign News

Many Charity Affairs on Smart Set Program.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

NOT content with confining her self to one act of kindness to someone less fortunate than herself, the Boston society woman literally fills her days with deeds that make for the greater happiness of the world—and that, even in this hot summer time, when the majority pictures the society woman idling away her time and money at the seaside.

Initiated in treading this sunpath of doing for others are many members of the Vincent Club, who are now working overtime to make the charity "country fair" and horse race, Saturday, at the Montserrat Golf Club, a success, as well as their numerous private charities, such as the vacation homes for girls being run by Miss Helen Frick and Miss Nora Sedgi, and the ten days' vacation which Mrs. Lars Anderson is planning for working girls at her home in Brookline.

Among the patronesses for the sale at Allerton Place, Marblehead, on July 25, for the benefit of the Boston Floating Hospital, are Mrs. Frank J. Macomber, Mrs. William J. Hammond, Mrs. L. Cushing Kimball, Mrs. Chester L. Davis, Mrs. Harriet G. Sprague, Mrs. Herbert E. Ferris, Mrs. A. R. Butman and Mrs. Thomas Hunt, who are working diligently for the success.

It is not in the selfish enjoyment of their wealth that these favored few are finding enjoyment, but in the distribution of it by helping others less fortunate than themselves. And there are hundreds working daily and so quietly that few ever knew of their good deeds.

"GETS-IT" Will Get Any Corn, Sure!

Almost Like Magic. Guaranteed.

You'll Quit Everything Else for "GETS-IT."

Any corn just loves to be cut and gouged, but it's mighty rough on you. Plasters and salves usually take away some of the toe with them and leave the corn to flourish.

The new corn cure "GETS-IT" is perfectly harmless to the healthy flesh, but it does go for a corn, bunion, callous or wart, right off the reel. The corn shrivels away from the healthy flesh and drops off.

You can apply "GETS-IT" in two seconds and it begins its work right off. Pretty soon you'll forget you ever had corns or bunions.

"GETS-IT" is sold at all druggists, at 25 cents a bottle, or sent on receipt of price by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago. Sold in Boston at all Riker-Jaynes stores.

SQUANTUM

A proposition to take over the Squantum Inn as a club house aroused enthusiasm at a special meeting of the Squantum Improvement association at the Inn. Charles S. Judkins, a real estate man who represents the owners of the property, and who is a member of the association was the guest of President C. E. Carlson and spoke at the meeting. He said he was ready to meet a working committee of the association with a view to naming a price at which the Inn and the 200,000 feet of land adjoining it would be turned over to the association. His offer met with applause and the committee now having the matter of a club house in charge will see Mr. Judkins and report his offer at a later meeting.

There was a wide diversity of opinion as to what kind of a clubhouse the Squantum residents want, whether a year-round club-house [illegible] on the higher land, a yacht [illegible] on the shore or a simple and inexpensive assembly hall. To bring the matter to a head so that the club-house committee could work more intelligently a motion was offered by Mr. Huntsman that each member present write his first, second and third choice upon a ballot. This was done and the ballots were turned over to the club-house committee for its consideration.

Charles F. Folsom, secretary of the Boston Board of Assessors, who has been a Squantum Summer resident for seventeen years, spoke strongly in favor of a yacht club. Enthusiastic speeches on the fine sentiments of Squantum people in getting together and working in harmony for different projects for the welfare of Squantum were made by Former President William N. Kenyon, James Eager, T. J. Callahan, C. E. Carlson, Mr. Logan, and Mr. Judkins.

Six members admitted to the association at last night's meeting are: Peter Olson, Henry Larson, Edward Carlson, B. A. Johnson, Robert Bell and Harry J. Tobin.

Prizes to the young ladies who took part in the float "Squantum Roses," which won first prize in the Atlantic and Squantum Fourth of July parades, were awarded at the home of Mrs. William A. Reed on Bellevue road. After the presentation of handsome cut glass pieces to each of the young ladies, there was dancing and a general good time. Those present were: Mrs. Gustave Wunderlich, Mrs. Joseph A. Duff, Mrs. John R. Nelson, Mrs. C. E. Carlson, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Mary Bickley and the following "Squantum Roses": Miss Annie Morrill, Miss Blanch Adams, Miss Eva Adams, Miss Hazel Lovejoy, Miss Ethel Morse, Miss Thelma Holt, Miss Catherine Grady, Miss Muriel Jones, Miss Logan, Miss Hazel Harvey and Parker Reed.

Robert Christy, son of A. P. Christy, proprietor of the Worcester Telegram, was a guest this week at the Squantum Inn. He motored down from Worcester in his new auto.

Miss Selena Burchall of Chicago is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. James Hugan at their bungalow on Bayside road.

The bathing at the beach has been excellent during the past two weeks. A crowd of from 100 to 150 enjoy this daily feature of Summer life at Squantum.

SCITUATE

Scituate's Summer folk have opened their season with their favorite diversion and dancing parties are quite the most frequent form of entertainment among the hostesses and the younger visitors. Mrs. Charles Copeland, who is one of the leading matrons, was hostess for a number of the youthful coterie on Tuesday, when she entertained in honor of her daughter, Miss Dorothy Copeland. The guests were from this and nearby colonies and numbered the most attractive buds of the visiting contingent.

Miss Anne and Miss Gertrude Halloran of Waltham, who are occupying The Locker for the heated term, were also among the entertainers of the week, giving a delightful dinner party for their guests, Miss Jane O'Brien and Miss Dorothy Mosier, both of whom are yearly visitors. Among the guests was Dr. Halloran, who is passing brief sojourns at the shore.

Recent additions to the artistic coterie include Henry C. Schuls of Boston, who is the guest of Mrs. J. E. O. Prouty. Mr. Schuls is a member of the musical set here, being a student of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Domiciled at the Arthur Williams estate in the Harbor are Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Davis and their family, who have come down from their Dover home for the shore months.

Quite the event of the season was the dance given by Robert Prouty of the year round colony, which included guests from the Scituate and North Scituate settlements. As patronesses for the affair, which was the largest of this Summer, were Mrs. T. Branch Alexander, Mrs. Howard Power, Mrs. Harry Kimball, Mrs. Anne Frye, Mrs. Harry Haynes and Mrs. Charles Copeland. Prominent among the fair attendants were Mrs. Inez Haynes Gillmore, Mrs. Warren May Hill, Mrs. F. They are prominent in the amateur theatricals, the shore gatherings and the social events of this territory.

Mr. and Mrs. Dana Jefferson, who arrived early in the Summer, are to be members of the shore colony for the season, occupying their home on the beach. They are of the large Norwood colony.

NANTASKET BEACH IS FAST BECOMING BIG COLONY OF COTTAGES

WHAT formerly was a transient and picnic resort is rapidly changing into a cottage colony. Nantasket Beach has become a rival of the regular shore settlements along this picturesque section. The rapid development of Sagamore and Hampton Hills and the increasing popularity of Strawberry Hill has made a great difference to this little colony, and now the sloping park fronting the Rockland House is being rapidly covered with Summer homes.

The advance in building cost and the high cost of living has not seemed to retard the progress in the booming of this territory, and the number of families has greatly increased the permanent business of the resort.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dyer of Whitman have just moved into their new home on Hampton Hill, which has just been finished.

The new garage which has been added to the Frank Dickerman cottage is one of the finest in this section. Mr. Dickerman is a member of the permanent Summer colony and included among the Hampton Circle cottagers.

Miss Mary Bailey and Miss Jeanette Bailey of Dorchester are enjoying a brief sojourn at Nantasket, where they are the guests at the Burney Leighton cottage on Hampton Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank McCarthy of Holbrook are domiciled at Pine Needles, their shore cottage. They are numbered among the residents of Sagamore Hill.

Frank Barn, who is among the Nantasket sojourners at this shore, where he is occupying the Tracy cottage, has joined the local business men and purchased one of the large interests on the beach.

Domiciled at their cottage on Sagamore Hill for the beach term are Mr. and Mrs. William J. Calhoun of East Boston.

Through the efforts of Senator Joseph P. Lomasney and Election Commissioner Minton, who are spending the Summer at Green Hill, a stone breakwater is to be erected around Crescent Cove, back of Atlantic avenue. During the past week, engineers made measurements for the foundations. The state appropriated several thousand dollars for the work.

John Slayman, the 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Slayman of St. Germain street, Boston, who sustained internal injuries and bruises about the head and body by falling from a grocery wagon on Jerusalem road, Cohasset, last Saturday, is recovering at the Summer home of his parents on Atlantic avenue. He is being attended by Dr. Osborne of Cohasset.

The new postoffice in the Green Hill section proves convenient for cottagers in the vicinity of Jerusalem road. Heretofore they had to walk or ride to "Four Corners," nearly a mile away, for their mail.

Leaders Are There.

More than 100 guests are summering at the Black Rock House. Among the notables are Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara, A. P. Langtry, secretary of state; Congressman G. E. Bull, wife and sister, Mrs. Catherine Royal and Alice O'Brien, the former of Chelsea and the latter of Cambridge.

BRANT ROCK

Seldom has Brant Rock had so prosperous a season and the demand for cottages has confirmed the opinion of the enthusiasts that this is one of the coming corners of the South Shore, for the families have greatly increased in the past few years and the season grown encouragingly longer.

Occupying the Maisie cottage are Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Sales and their family, who have arrived for the season. They are members of the Boston colony.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Slade of West Somerville, have arrived for their season visit at the Everett cottage on the Brant Rock shore.

RELIABLE METHODS OF BEAUTY CULTURE

WHEN TOO FAT—Dissolve 4 ounces parnotis in 1½ pints hot water, and when it cools take a tablespoonful three times a day. This is a harmless, quick and certain way by which to reduce weight without dieting or inconvenience. When the desired weight is attained, the flesh will be firm and the skin free from wrinkles or flabbiness.

WHEN EYEBROWS ARE THIN—Rubbing a little pyroxin on eyebrows with finger-end makes them grow thick and silky. For stubby lashes, apply pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger and in a short while they will come in long and curly. Be careful not to get pyroxin where hair is not wanted.

FOR A YOUTH-TONED SKIN—To ½ pint witch hazel (or hot water) add 4 ounces spurmax, then 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine, and you will have a face-lotion very superior to powder. This is excellent to banish [illegible], sallowness and fine lines, and will give to the complexion that youth-tint and velvety smoothness so noticeable in healthy maidenhood. The spurmax lotion prevents tan, sunburn, freckles and skin-roughness, and can not be detected when on. Using this harmless lotion does away with that powdered, lifeless look.

FOR GLOSSY, FLUFFY HAIR—The hair can be kept brilliant and fluffy during the most trying days of Summer by occasional shampoos with plain canthrox, a teaspoonful of which dissolved in a cup hot water is ample for a thorough cleansing. Canthrox shampoos invigorate the scalp and remove [illegible] to faded, "stringy" hair a richness of color and silky fluff that always marks the head of perfect hair. The regular use of canthrox will induce a healthy growth, thick and long.

FOR HAIR AND SCALP TROUBLES—The intense itching and burning sensation caused by an unhealthy condition of the scalp is easily corrected with a quinzoin tonic, made by adding 1 ounce quinzoin to ½ pint alcohol, then pouring in ½ pint water. This tonic soothes and invigorates the scalp [illegible] and enlivens the hair roots [illegible] use insures a clean, healthy scalp and an abundance of long, glossy hair, rich in its natural color.

WHEN YOUR EYES SMART—Two or three drops of a plain crystos eye-tonic quickly relieve the smarting, burning sensation and soothe tired muscles. To prepare this harmless eye-tonic, dissolve 1 ounce crystos in a pint cold, clear water. This is excellent for removing dust and foreign particles and brings prompt relief [illegible] for granulated lids. Occasional [illegible] crystos eye-tonic gives to the eyes a charming brilliancy and expressiveness and frequently overcomes the need for glasses.

FOR HAIRY GROWTHS—A delatone paste applied to skin for 2 or 3 minutes will remove even a stubborn growth of hair. To prepare, mix enough powdered delatone and water to cover the hairy surface. After removing the delatone, wash the skin and it will be found hairless and free from any blemish or discoloration.

GOOD FRECKLE CREAM—To banish tan, freckles and sunburn, rub plenty of almozoin cream jelly on [illegible]. This inexpensive, home-made [illegible] is very fine to protect the skin [illegible] scorching sun and hot winds. To prepare, put 1 ounce almozoin into ½ pint water to which is added 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. The almozoin cream is splendid for rubbing out lines and rounding out hollows, and its use gives to a "muddy," rough skin a clearness and velvety smoothness truly charming.

WEAK, WORN BODIES—An old-fashioned tonic for restoring health and energy can be made by adding 1 ounce kardene into 1 pint alcohol, then adding ½ cupful sugar and enough hot water to make a quart. Taking a tablespoonful of this before meals gently rids the system of poisonous accumulations and repairs waste tissues. It is splendid as a Summer tonic and for lost appetite, as well as to clear the skin of pimples, blotches and "muddiness."

Belfast Tories Are Denounced

Protestants Defend Home Rule

Leading Methodist and Presbyterian Organs in England Defend Bill, Declaring It Is Inevitable

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

cendancy party that they naturally do not like the prospect of having to take their place in the community according to their numbers, and are raising all sorts of difficulties to try to frighten the electorate of this country from consenting to the grant of self-government to the self-contained part of the kingdom.

Quite deliberately the unionists are endeavoring to arouse all the worst religious passions of 200 years ago, and all for the sake of winning a party victory and of preventing the grant of a measure of justice to the Irish people. We would ask the inhabitants of the northeast corner of Ulster if they really think that they are doing any good for themselves by allowing Ulster to be used as a tool for party purposes. They cannot stop home rule. That is now inevitable. In the minds of the British people it was settled when self-government was given to South Africa with such beneficent results.

A Policy of Open Sores.

It has always been the policy of the Tory party to keep open sores in order to prevent the nation from proceeding to that social legislation which they detest. Until home rule is out of the way progress in this direction cannot be made. That is the chief reason why the tories are opposing the bill for Irish self-government."

In line with this declaration by the Christian World is the following editorial comment in the Methodist Times:

"The Orange leaders demand that their wishes shall override the wishes of the vast majority of the inhabitants of their own country the majority of the inhabitants of this country and the whole (practically) of the rest of the [illegible] tion of this empire, because they don't like home rule. It is a preposterous claim that in an empire of 400 millions, one million should override all the rest.

As a matter of safe prediction, says this [illegible] Methodist organ, if a referendum of the whole empire were taken and everybody even women [illegible] voted, they would probably be beaten by seventy millions to twenty or thirty millions.

Home rule will be carried, says the Times, as the government proposes and as the empire approves. And its Orange opponents will be left protesting—rioting, if they so choose.

Equally strong is the attitude of the British Weekly, a leading organ of the Presbyterians of Great Britain, whose editor says:

We are most fully convinced that the Irish Presbyterians, by a great majority, detest the threats of civil war which have been so freely used by their own [illegible] in Parliament. They know [illegible] it comes to a question of civil war there are other than Presbyterians and Episcopalians in Ireland, and that no Irishman is a coward. They know also, unless we are greatly mistaken, that a complete change is passing over the political situation and that this change affects the whole empire and tells in every [illegible] of it.

Tribute to Learned Man.

Undoubtedly one of the most respected men in all Ireland is the venerable Dr. George Sigerson of Dublin, who for half a century has occupied a foremost place in Irish intellectual affairs as a scholar, a poet and a scientist. As a young student he published his "Poets and Poetry of Munster," and ever since he has been busy, in one form or another, in the literary life of the country. And all this time he was also untiring in the field of medicine.

It was my good fortune last Summer to hear Dr. Sigerson deliver a delightful lecture, which he gave one evening at Ballsbridge, in the presence of a distinguished company, including Lord and Lady Aberdeen, and many other leading lights in the political and literary society of Dublin.

Dr. Sigerson dealt with the early, prehistoric people who lived on the Arran

[illegible] National University. The committee includes

Right Hon. James Bryce, Alfred Perceval Graves, T. P. O'Connor, M. P.; Professor Swift McNeill, M. P.; Stephen Gwynne, M. P.; Land Commissioner Bailey, Katherine Tynan, Professor R. A. MacAlister, Dr. Douglas Hyde, Professor [illegible] of the National University and many others in the world of literature and education.

Some Vital Statistics

Another interesting batch of Irish census figures just given out deals with the population of Wexford and Kildare. According to the returns the population of Wexford County is 102,273, being 1,851 more than the census of 1901.

The number of emigrants that left Wexford, during the ten years since the last census was 2,900, as compared with 3,960 in the previous decade. The emigrants from the County of Wexford within the last sixty years totalled 75,075, equal to 75 per cent of the present population.

The census says that the population of County Kildare is [illegible], an increase of 3,061 over the figures of 1901.

During the decade the number of emigrants from Kildare was 2,630 as compared with 2,113 in the decade ending in 1901. This is an increase of 517. The emigrants of Kildare during the past sixty years numbered 38,551, being 45 per cent of the population.

The [illegible] emigration is [illegible] source of anxiety to Ireland. Speaking of the continued outgo of young people from the country, a leading citizen of Dublin said the other day:

"The [illegible] danger threatening Ireland today is the danger of extinction of the Irish race within her own shores. For nearly sixty years the flow of emigration has gone on continuously till the population of the country has reduced one-half. It is plain that public opinion in Ireland still requires to be educated as to [illegible] of the emigrant and as to the evil of the prepaid passage."

Despite all this, it will be many years before the youth of Ireland ceases to look westwards for its future. The only cure for emigration is self-government and improved social conditions for the masses of the people. These attained, there will [illegible] need of an anti-emigration movement.

DUCHESS MARLBOROUGH HELPS LLOYD GEORGE TO CARRY OUT AMAZING INSURANCE SCHEME

She Does More, for in Forming and Explaining Her Domestic Servants' Society She Makes Clear Intricate Workings of Act Which Compels 30,000 000 Poor Workers to Protect Themselves Against Dark Days of Sickness and Idleness

By JOHN L. EDDY.

Special Correspondent to the Sunday American.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, July 20.—The National Insurance act, the most remarkable, the most paternal measure looking to social reform that the world has ever known, went into operation this week.

This act, the creation of David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, orders, broadly, that every person between the ages of sixteen and seventy in the service of an employer, must pay a proportion of his or her wage to certain insurance agencies. The employer contributes and the State contributes to the fund.

In the words of Lloyd-George himself:

The workmen's insurance act aims to make provisions for keeping the household from poverty, to keep the worker and his family from pauperism in the black days of sickness which come to every household and to guard against that suffering from lack of employment for which the workman is not responsible.

PEERESSES TAKE UP CONTROVERSY,

The new act has aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the one hand and provoked the bitterest criticism and opposition on the other.

It has divided noblewomen on that despised but perennial question, the servant girl question.

Lady Desart and several other fashionables have formed "The Servant Tax Resister's League."

The Duchess of Marlborough has organized "The Domestic Servants' Insurance Society" to help servant girls to insure themselves on the same favorable terms as men. The reason for this is that under the new law most male workers can insure through their labor unions; the servant girls have no labor unions.

The Duchess has written and published under her own name an article explaining the purpose of this society, and the article is most valuable in that it discusses the provisions and workings of the bill in a clear, distinct and masterly fashion. The noteworthy contribution to the small amount of clarifying literature on a much vexed question is as follows:

By THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

The Domestic Servant's Insurance Society is intended for domestic servants, seamstresses, waitresses or persons otherwise usually engaged in labor in any private dwelling house, club, hotel, lodging house or residence.

In view of the great number of existing societies of long standing, which have now added health insurance to their benefits, the question is often asked "Why should a new society for women, domestic servants, have been formed?"

The most obvious reason is because her conditions of work are different from those of any other class of workers and she should have a society of her own to suit her own particular needs.

The advantages of joining a society instituted to meet the needs of women domestic servants are:

A Series of Advantages.

1—That owing to the special conditions of her employment there will probably be less claim on the sick fund and more money to spare for providing the benefits.

2—Because the Domestic Servants' Insurance Society will be able to arrange for her to receive some other benefit instead of sick pay if the members so desire.

3—Because the Domestic Servants' Insurance Society will also act as a friendly society and provide other benefits outside the act, such as additional pensions, "payment down" on marriage and death and funeral benefits, if she care to make additional contributions.

From these facts it follows that there is every reason for forming a Domestic Servants' Insurance Society for women only and that women engaged in domestic service will have interests more fully considered and furthered by joining such a society than by becoming members of some general society.

The benefits to be obtained under the act are:

1—Medical benefit, which means free doctor and medicine.

2—Sanitorium benefit.

3—Sickness benefit, which constitutes sick pay of seven shillings and six pence a week for six weeks beginning on the fourth day of sickness.

4—Disablement benefit, consisting of payment of five shillings a week, if after twenty-six weeks she is incapable of work.

A Resume of Benefits.

These are the benefits under the act which every approved society will have to provide, and the Duchess intends to give special attention to particular benefits most likely to be required by women, such as dental treatment, pensions, increase of sick, disablement or maternity pay, reduction of contributions or special truth in times of distress.

A commendable measure of good will on the part of both mistresses and servants in seeking, first of all to comply with regulations imposed and, secondly, in obtaining the best possible conditions to suit the particular case of the servant insured would no doubt help to clear many misapprehensions and fears not justified by the act itself, and which are calculated to harm the very class for whose benefit this legislation has been provided.

Of a different mind from the American-born Duchess of Marlborough is Mrs. Sephina D. Robinson-Puppy, who deserves to become as internationally famous, as her name is unique.

Mrs. Robinson-Puppy has a fifteen-room house at Broadlands, Maiden, where she formerly employed eight servants. She was so incensed at having to pay six cents a week for each of these servants as her share of the insurance fund to guarantee that they would be cared for in case of sickness, disability or loss of employment, that she discharged all of them and is doing her housework herself.

Fully twenty millions of people, employers and employes, come under the operation of the act. Already ten and one-half millions have availed themselves of its provision; the government confidently expects that, by Christmas, all but 30,000 of the persons effected by the act will have taken advantage of it. Yet a society has been formed, headed by two distinguished writers, Hilaire Belloc and George K. Chesterton to raise funds to support test cases at law against the act, and to protect those who refuse to pay the dues it imposes.

The Fierce Tory Opposition.

Lloyd-George regards this measure as his greatest triumph and this fact in itself perhaps accounts for the desperate organized resistance with which it continues to be met on all Tory sides. The attempt of certain newspapers, chief among which were Lord Northcliffe's London Times and Daily Mail, to organize a national boycott have met with only meagre success.

Apart from the doctors who have not yet accepted the terms offered by the government for the treatment of sick persons under the act, there have been only sporadic cases of resistance, and these have resulted merely in making the participants appear ridiculous. For instance, there is the case of the city clerks, who solemnly met at the noon hour in Finsbury Circus last Tuesday and publicly burned the act.

Newspaper photographers, who had been notified in advance were on hand to snapshot the riotous scene. The heat was intense and a short fat man who appeared on a narrow balcony to make a speech, announcing that he was about to burn "the damnable and disgusting act," was flushed, sweating and ill at ease. A curious crowd large enough to satisfy the purposes of its promoters, who merely wanted photographs and discriptions to be printed in the newspapers, gathered around. Everything would have gone well enough had not some facetious spectator called for three cheers for Lloyd-George.

Counter Cheers for George.

The crowd, evidently as much in sympathy with George as with the incendiaries, gave the cheers with a will.

The Act, held by the apoplectic man, at the end of a pair of tongs, was burned amid ribald cries of the crowd and clicks of press cameras. The tory press banefully reported it next day as a serious affair. With equal consistency they attributed two suicides to the iniquites of the Act.

There are of course some inequalities and inconsistencies in the measure, which may be corrected in time. Casual workers have to pay more for their insurance than skilled artisans who work every day. Then again the "first person" for whom he works during the week pays the employer's part of the tax for the entire week. Naturally this may make it difficult for the casual to get a job on Monday morning, but he will probably get around that by paying the whole week's tax on Monday.

Reports in the Tory press, which is ransacking the Kingdom for instances of the new machine's failure, say that since the really serious difficulty that employers dealing with large bodies of men are having is adjusting themselves to the peaceful, but nevertheless painful, revolution through which England is passing under the leadership of Lloyd-George.

A HIT IN PARIS.

Mrs. Van Valkenberg's Arrival Causes Quite a Flutter.

PARIS, July 20.—Mrs. Van Valkenberg of New York, previously and better known as the ten million dollar widow, has created quite a flutter here. Scarcely had she arrived at the Hotel Mirabeau than Miss Fannie Reed gave a reception in her honor. At this were present the Princess de Honeinhe, Princess de Poggio-Suisa, the Duchess de Talleyrand, Duchess de la Rochefoucauld, Marquis de Talleyrand-Perigord, Countess de Gabriac, Andre de Fouquieres, Ambassadors Ivelsky of Russia, Tittoni of Italy, Mrs. Frederick Bell of Canada, Mrs. John Monroe of Paris and Miss Lillie Lawlor of San Francisco. Mrs. Van Valkenberg has taken a furnished suite next door to Miss Reed in the Rue de la Pompe.

Princesses Won't Wed as They Are Bid

Refuse to Be Sacrificed to Diplomacy

Grand Duchess Olga of Russia Rejects Kaiser's Son and Carries Love Token of a Lad.

UPSETS KAISER'S MATCHING

By BARON VON ELPHBERG

Special Cable to Sunday American.

BERLIN, July 20.—There are enough marriageable Princesses in Europe today to compose a beauty show and there are enough Imperial, Royal and Grand Ducal matrons who would make "desirable" husbands for these same Princesses to form a company of a King's regiment.

But it is not so easy nowadays to marry off these Princesses to these young men. It used to be enough for a chancellor or foreign minister to advise a monarch:

"The marriage of your charming daughter to the son of such and such a King will cement the union of the two nations."

Then there was a perfunctory betrothal and presto! the monarch's charming daughter and the King's son were married.

Not so nowadays; the Princesses are exhibiting the independent spirit of the day, and each, like any daughter of the people, is declaring that she will marry the man of her heart or no man.

One of these independent young ladies is the Grand Duchess Olga, the seventeen-year-old daughter of the Czar.

Plead a Previous Engagement.

When the two Cæsars, the Czar and the Kaiser, met a few days ago in Finnish waters it was reported in every capital of Europe that a match would be arranged between this young lady and Prince Adalbert, the Kaiser's third son, who is twenty-eight years old.

Prince Adalbert accompanied his imperial father on the yacht Hohenzollern to meet the Czar. As I added to the New York American such an alliance would be of immense political importance, it would strengthen the bonds between the two great empires; France, Russia's present ally, would regard it as most ominous.

But the Kaiser's purpose was not solely political. Prince Adalbert is like so many young sailormen, has a roving fancy, but it has turned rather steadfastly toward a pretty actress. To end this infatuation his father had determined to send the Prince with the German squadron which visited New York recently. But the German Emperor, who has become a great matchmaker, changed his mind and took Prince Adalbert with him to the Baltic port.

That much has been made public, but it has not been told that an inseparable obstacle stood in the way of the union between the Hohenzollerns and Romanoffs. The Czar, whose whisper is the fiat of a hundred millions, could not sway his daughter's heart. Nor did he try tyrannically to do so, for Grand Duchess Olga is her father's favorite child.

An Exchange of Tokens.

Recently the youthful Grand Duchess confessed to her father that she was not indifferent to handsome Prince Adalbert's attentions. But she had given her heart to her cousin, Grand Duke Dimitri Paulovitch, son of the Czar's uncle, Grand Duke Paul, whose second marriage was the culmination of a passionate romance. And Grand Duchess Olga confessed that she and Paul, the fine soldier, twenty-one years old, had spoken of their affection and that she wore hidden a diamond pendant as a remembrance of these words.

So the Grand Duchess had her way and Prince Adalbert went his.

All of which goes to show that nowadays marriages of those born to the purple are made in Heaven and not in the Chancelleries.

It is well known here that before the republican uprising in Portugal, diplomats sought to arrange a marriage or, at least, an engagement between King Manuel and Princess Mary, only daughter of King George of England. King Manuel's father, King Carlos, was an intimate friend of Princess Mary's grandfather, King Edward. Besides a marital alliance between England and Portugal seemed then most desirable. But as the story goes, the young Princess Mary refused to permit herself to be used as a pawn in the European game, and in this decision her mother supported her spiritedly.

Germany also offers another example of opinionative Princesses.

Victoria Louise, the Kaiser's only daughter, has been courted indirectly by the scions of half the ruling families of Europe. Now it was reported that she would marry the Prince of Wales; again a young Austrian Archduke; yet again the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, an intimate friend of her family.

But while she had treated them all with pretty politeness, she remains mistress of her choice, and that has not yet been made.

Now, as I added last week, the intriguers are busy in the attempt to marry off the eighteen-year-old Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide of Luxemburg, a ruler in her own right, enormously wealthy, one of the greatest catches in Europe. But she, too, has shown she has a will of her own.

KING GEORGE'S ONLY DAUGHTER, PRINCESS MARY.

Eat an Egg Shell and Life Will Be Delight

Famous Scientists Declare That in This Diet Lie the Makings of a Perfect Race.

By PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX

Special cable to Sunday American.

ROME, June 20.—"Eat eggshells; eat eggshells. Throw away the yolk if need be and spit out the white if you will, but eat the shells. Then you will be healthy and happy, and live to see your grandchildren's children."

Such is the earnest advice given by Professor Cocca and Loewa and published widely here.

The words "eat eggshells" must not be taken too literally. The learned professors have prepared a liquid they call the chloride of eggshells. Like the altruistic scientists they are, they have proclaimed the formula for this chloride; there is no secret about it, nothing proprietory. So, perhaps, their advice should be worded:

"Drink eggshells."

Professor Emmerick of Munich is world renowned for his knowledge of diphtheria and cholera. He and his colleague, Loewe, declare that the matronly and industrious hen is one of the greatest benefactors of mankind, not because she produces eggs, but because the eggs are contained in shells.

These learned men assert that eggshells taken in proper form, strengthen human vitality, add weight to the body destroy imperious bacilli, nourish the brains, strengthen the heart, prevent inflammation and lend courage and energy to the human being.

Even more important from a sociological point of view is the assertion by Emmerick and Loewe that a diet of eggshells reduces to fecundity and prevents depopulation. They fed eggshells to two pairs of white mice. Within a given time forty-four very small sons were added to the population of white mice. In the same given time four pairs of white mice who had to do without the stimulating eggshells were blessed with a progeny which numbered only nine.

Harcourts Shocked by Attempts at Arson

LONDON, July 20.—The attempt to set fire to Nuneham, the beautiful home of the Harcourts, came as a great shock to Louis Harcourt, whose passion for the home which is packed with priceless works of art is only exceeded by that of his wife, who is a niece of Pierpont Morgan. Mrs. Harcourt has done much to beautify the place with the aid of that check for $250,000 which her uncle presented her with a few years ago.

Nuneham, as it stands now, was built about three hundred years ago, but in the older house, now demolished, on the same estate the Harcourts have lived for seven centuries. At one time the heads of the family were Earls of Harcourt, but the title died out.

One of these Earls served in the American war and took General Lee a prisoner. The late Sir William Harcourt, who also had an American wife, inherited the property from his nephew.

At present six policemen guard Nuneham day and night.

British Court Gives a Boost to British Beer

LONDON, July 20.—For the first time in the history of court functions beer has appeared on the refreshment tables in addition to the usual champagne cup, claret cup, tea and coffee.

At a mammoth garden party given at Windsor Castle elegant cut glass jugs were found to contain an excellent light beer. At first it was thought that this was intended as a delicate compliment to the labor members in the House of Commons, but society women drank it with relish.

Both beer and cider have become the fashion this season and the King has just laid down in the cellars of Buckingham Palace a large stock of Devonshire cider.

Duke Demands His Tournament Trophy

LONDON, July 20.—The Duke of Marlborough has claimed the gold cup which was presented to Captain Guest as the best knight in jousting at the Elizabethan tourney last week. The Duke claims it on the ground Captain Guest, who had suddenly taken the place of his brother, Lord Ashby St. Ledgers, had been announced as Lord Ashby St. Ledgers, was therefore wrongly announced and should not be disqualified. The Duke's claims may be sound enough, but it takes a native of months in professional athletics than in knightly courtesies of the tourney.

There is some talk of repeating the tourney at an early date at more reasonable prices, as the first statements of cost of last week's performance did not pay its way. There is also a pun afoot for a tourney to be given by citizens of New York by local brave Knights and fair ladies.

Queen Shakes Hands With Many Hundreds

LONDON, July 20.—Queen Alexandra becomes more and more surprising to the members of her household every day. At a large garden party which she gave for the Red Cross League she stood under a great Indian canopy of red and gold, which was supported by poles of pure silver, and insisted upon shaking hands with more than a thousand people. In spite of her lameness, she absolutely declined to sit down.

The original intention was to present perhaps a dozen people and allow the rest to file past, but the Queen Mother, who was very excited, refused to hear of it. She is exhausting herself in her determination to keep well to the front in public life.

AMERICAN TITLE SEEKERS WARNED BY CASTELLANE

Marquis Correspondent Points Out True and False Values of Dukes and Such Like.

By COUNT DE CASTELLANE.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, July 20.—The arrest of a bogus Count, who has been in the habit of marrying on the strength of his title, is a warning to American women desirous of coronets and costs of arms to be very careful to have the claims of titled aspirants examined. There are 60,000 persons in France who use titles without being able to produce a single proof of their right to do so.

Why does not the law stop them? Because the republic does not care what a man calls himself.

Under the Republic we have, of course, decai houses, but a Duke has not a hereditary seat in Parliament. The Duke de Mouchy, for instance, does not sit in our Senate and is elected to a seat in the Chamber of Deputies. In France, too, we have no feudatory Marquises and Counts, but the government only tolerates them and they have no State positions because of their titles.

Sometimes property can be bought cheap. A few worthless acres of land in Italy or Austria may carry a title with them.

In fact, there is a regular market for the sale of such titles. Some impecunious nobles are glad to have titles to sell. Even the illegitimate sons get titles this wise; their mothers having amassed fortunes, marry needy nobles and get these latter to adopt their sons born out of wedlock. The adopted sons have really a right to the titles.

Another interesting point in connection with the titles is the use of the particle "De." I myself, by territory not to the family name. For instance, the "de" in the Castellane family originally came from the Castellane country. But the "de" in the title of the Marquis Demarmaben is altogether different.

The custom of putting crowns and coronets on our note paper, carriages, shirts, is becoming obsolete. The best of the nobility now use only the coats of arms. Hence, however, we retain the custom of signing one's title. For instance, the former Miss Mattie Mitchell signs herself Duchess De La Rochefoucauld, whereas the former Consuelo Vanderbilt, following in the English wanton, writes her letters over the signature Consuela Marlborough.

STORER IN LATIN QUARTER.

Talks on Atonement Before Club Run by a Marquis.

PARIS, July 20.—The Marquis de Chambrun has closed for the season his social half religious society called "St. Geneviev's Club." The Marquis, who is a relative by marriage of the Bellamy Storers, is the president of the club, whose Sunday evening gatherings are a feature of the Latin quarter.

The Marquis de Chambrun got his kinsman, Bellamy Storer, to give the closing lecture. The former American Minister to Austria took for his subject "The Work of Christ or Society of the Atonement at Gray Moor, N. J." The idea of an American diplomat holding forth on Atonement in the heart of the Latin Quarter attracted a large audience. Though at first blush preaching in the Church of Abelard looks like an attempt to convert the Moulin Rouge, the young people who went to hear the former American Minister were Christians.

HOLDS RECORD AS GUEST.

New York Woman Is Columbus of Health Resort.

PARIS, July 20.—Dr. Blanc, the new Mayor of Aix-les-Bains, and its town councilors have been proclaiming from the housetops that J. Pierpont Morgan is the discoverer as well as the greatest friend of their healthy Alpine town.

But Mrs. A. T. Stuart of Albany easily dispels any such pretentions by proving that she is the eldest "discoverer" of the salubrious spot. Indignant that anyone should try to snatch from her the honor of having been the Columbus of Aix-les-Bains, she confesses that she took the cure there even before the late Queen Victoria.

Every year for the past forty-three years Mrs. Evans has visited Aix-les-Bains. To the sweets, the air and the water of Aix Mrs. Evans attributes her extraordinary vitality at the age of eighty-one.

WALES NEW RESIDENCE.

Reported White Lodge in Richmond Park Is for Prince.

LONDON, July 20.—There are all sorts of interesting rumors about the future residence of the Prince of Wales. One is that Sir George Holford will eventually lease Dorchester House to the young Prince and another is that it is far more probable is that White Lodge in Richmond Park will become once more a royal residence.

It was there the Prince was born and his mother, Queen Mary, was for a time blood. At any rate, orders have recently been given to thoroughly renovate White Lodge, so the rumor is strongly current.

MRS. AVA ASTOR'S TOUR.

Will Make Extended Auto Trip in France and Italy.

LONDON, July 20.—Mrs. Ava Willing Astor has completed plans for her motor tour with her son, Vincent. They will start from Dover and will journey in a manner through the famous chateau district and afterwards down to the Riviera. They will run out of the way districts in Italy and return through Switzerland. They will spend a brief visit to Newport in the late Fall, but will return to Europe after the holidays, where they will entertain at her home in Grosvenor square, which is still incomplete.

IN BETTER FARMING SEEING IS BELIEVING

Development of Demonstration Work Has Drawn Classes Together.

UNDERSTAND ONE ANOTHER

Farmer, Business Man and the Railroad Interests Join Hands.

By ROBERT W. NEAL.

SEEING is believing. That is the reason why demonstration work in agricultural methods has become so important. In all parts of the country, but especially in the South, the practical object lesson has come to be of the greatest service to agriculture.

A year ago the Massachusetts Agricultural College ran trolley and steam demonstration trains through various parts of the State with very satisfactory results. In the South and West corn trains have been sent out year after year, and methods and results with corn and other important crops have been placed before the farmers in actual farm for explanation and study. The same method has been extended to other subjects, and moving schools of household economy and the like have brought to the farm women illustrations of ways and means that have been immensely encouraging and stimulative.

Practical Lessons for the Farmers.

Demonstration farms and orchards (such for instance as the demonstration orchards conducted by the Massachusetts College) have further served as daily illustration and proof to the practical farmer of the value of business and scientific method.

Perhaps even more valuable than the demonstration farm conducted by a station or college has been the demonstration farm conducted by co-operation between a college or a board of agriculture and individual farmers.

The farmer becomes the agent of the college or board, cropping and cultivating according to the direction of its expert authorities, and through his increased success and the direct instruction passed on by him to others, establishes beyond question the proper methods for his locality and the increased returns that follow their employment.

The success of actual demonstration thus begun under Federal or State authority has been so great that countries and other local units, and organizations of farmers, have taken up similar work, employing agents or directors to act as advisers in limited territories.

Endowment May Be Continued.

Bankers and business houses have also recognized the necessity to sound business conditions of the best conditions in agriculture, and have added their influence toward extending the same method of demonstration. One large firm in Chicago recently gave $100,000 outright to employ an agricultural adviser in each of a hundred counties in the Missouri valley.

If this year's experiment proves satisfactory, the firm is under promise to continue the endowment for ten years.

But the improvement of farm crops is the sole benefit that has come from the extension of demonstration work. When leaders in the local community, agricultural experts throughout the country, bankers, merchants, farmers and railroad companies unite toward a common end, they discover the inter-dependence of all their interests.

Men who thus work together establish an understanding and sympathy that will make the solution of all future problems of legislation and business among them at once easier and more fair. In the improvement of social and economic relations no less than in the improvement of business and agricultural methods, seeing is believing.

RELEASING NITROGEN.

New Means of Increasing Availability of Important Element.

Recent experiments conducted by the department of soil technology at the Cornell experiment station have shown a new benefit from the growth of legumes with either crop. This discovery is that legumes are very efficient in rendering available the insoluble part of the nitrogen of the soil.

The increased supply of available nitrogen observed, which is believed to be owing to the presence of the legume, has a very important influence on the yield of other crops or soils in which nitrogen is important.

In every case in these experiments the nitrogen content of the crop, and the yield also, were greater when the legume was grown than when it was omitted. Timothy with alfalfa did much better than timothy alone, as did also timothy with red clover. Oats grown with peas showed a higher protein content than did oats grown alone.

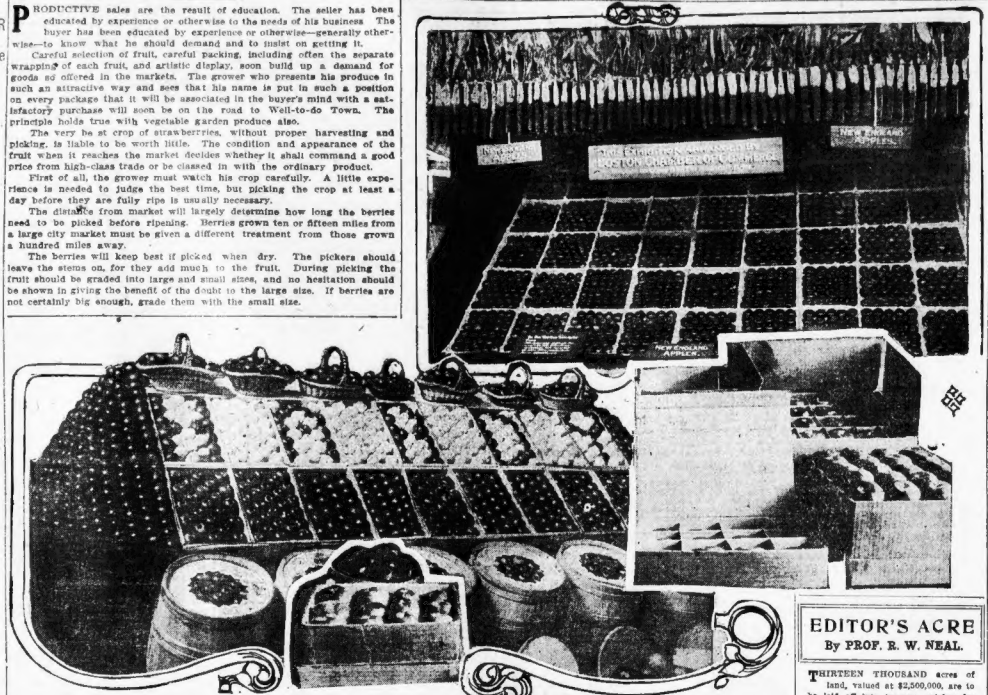
These observations may result in an important modification of cropping methods through the growing of legumes with many of our common crops in order to draw upon a larger supply of nitrogen.

EAST TO RIVAL THE FAR WEST IN THE PACKING OF FRUIT

High Prices Impossible Unless Orchardists Meet the New Conditions

High Quality Alone Will Sustain New England's Reputation and Win Trade for Producers.

FRUIT put up in this manner tempts the consumer and increases sales, proper packing having been one of the West's greatest assets.



PRODUCTIVE sales are the result of education. The seller has been educated by experience or otherwise to the needs of his business. The buyer has been educated by experience or otherwise—generally otherwise—to know what he should demand and to insist on getting it.

Careful selection of fruit, careful packing, including often the separate wrapping of each fruit, and artistic display, soon build up a demand for goods so offered in the markets. The grower who presents his produce in such an attractive way and sees that his name is put in such a position on every package that it will be associated in the buyer's mind with a satisfactory purchase will soon be on the road to Well-to-do Town. The principle holds true with vegetable garden produce also.

The very be st crop of strawberries, without proper harvesting and picking, is liable to be worth little. The condition and appearance of the fruit when it reaches the market decides whether it shall command a good price from high-class trade or be classed in with the ordinary product.

First of all, the grower must watch his crop carefully. A little experience is needed to judge the best time, but picking the crop at least a day before they are fully ripe is usually necessary.

The distance from market will largely determine how long the berries need to be picked before ripening. Berries grown ten or fifteen miles from a large city market must be given a different treatment from those grown a hundred miles away.

The berries will keep best if picked when dry. The pickers should leave the stems on, for they add much to the fruit. During picking the fruit should be graded into large and small sizes, and no hesitation should be shown in giving the benefit of the doubt to the large size. If berries are not certainly big enough, grade them with the small size.

The best size package is the quart box. It pays to face the fruit in the boxes, seeing that the bulls are turned down, as a surface of rich red berries is far superior in persuasive power to one specked with green, although the fruit is absolutely of the same quality in each.

For the best trade it will often pay to wrap the boxes in paraffine paper. This is especially true with the first grade berries.

In shipping, big crates of any description are usually handled roughly. The result is bruised strawberries. The crates should never run over thirty-two quarts.

For trade only a short distance away, a tray will often catch the eye where the crate fails.

Every market, however, has its peculiarities. The business grower will experiment until he has found what his custom demands or appreciates, then give it nothing else.

Marketing the Fruit of New England

The New England orchardist must also radically change his methods of picking, sorting and packing his fruit, if he hopes to secure the high prices obtained by his Western competitors. When his trees have come to bearing he must not shake the trunk, bringing ripe and half-ripe fruit tumbling about his head. He must not toss it, windfalls, wormholes and all, into a second-hand barrel, and jolt it many to market. He must, on the contrary, pick, grade and pack it by the best modern methods. Unattractive and poorly packed crates of the best of New England apples will not sell in the open market against those of a Western shipper who is alive to the demands of his customers for hand-picked and well-graded fruit. Apples must be picked from the trees by hand.

The lazy method of allowing the apples to fall to the ground, or shaking the trees to induce them to fall, is only permissible if the fruit be destined for second-class cider. Neither should the tree be stripped. We do not pick tomatoes or corn without some process of selection. The banana raiser of the South and the orange grower of the Pacific Coast must pick their fruit green. So much the better reason why we should not. That is the benefit of living at the door of the market.

The second important thing is properly to grade the fruit. Most of the city markets demand that fruit be carefully and uniformly graded. A frank declaration of quality, as first, second or third, stamped on the box, or perhaps on the individual wrapper of each piece of fruit, goes far toward securing business friendship. The certainty of the purchaser as to just what quality of goods he is to receive means better and steadier prices.

High Quality to Sustain Reputation.

A danger resulting from being so near the market is that of sending to it poor, half-ripe and decayed fruit. This ruins not only the reputation of New England fruit, but near your's miles of good fruit. High quality alone will sustain its supremacy.

The western grower carefully grades his fruit, so that the apples in the middle of the boxes and in the bottom too, are just as good as those on top.

Packing the fruit for market is of no less importance. Unbruised apples should be packed in contact with each other, with the greatest of skill and honesty. Boxes instead of barrels should be used for packing. The high price of barrels as well as the fact that the smaller packages are more easily handled and transported and are more nearly appropriate to the needs of the average family, make the choice of a package. And finally it is well to heed the western idea of wrapping each apple separately in tissue paper, marked with the name of the grower. This gives health ful publicity, and it the consumer likes the fruit, as he ought, it insures later sales for the dealer.

Tin use of these methods is not mere fastidiousness. It is good, hard-headed business.

Liquid manures are good for well established rose bushes. Care must be used in applying them in the later Summer months and in dry weather, however. They are best applied after a rain. Used too freely, they stimulate wood and leaf growth and check flowering.

Bulbs that are expected to flower in Winter should be removed from the light and warmth, and kept for several weeks in a cool, dark cellar or room. When brought out into the light and warmth at the beginning of the Winter they put forth a quick growth of stalk, leaves and flowers.

Hydrangeas Thrive and Please.

The hydrangea is attractive and popular. It is a hardy or half-hardy species of shrub, simple in its cultivation and great in its attractiveness. It has come not only to be set out-of-doors, but also, by proper breeding, to be used as a house plant.

Both species, the hardy and half-hardy, require a medium rich soil and a moderate amount of water. With a little care, such as pruning, and with watering in excessively dry weather, they will bloom year after year.

Here Are 20 Poultry Pointers

Saving the Flock from Disease

SEVERAL matters about white diarrhea should be brought to the attention of practical poultrymen, even though there is not sufficient evidence to warrant positive statements regarding them.

The trap nest records of individual hens, when studied in connection with the results of egg examination, seem to indicate that hens infected with bacillary white diarrhea are comparatively poor layers. This is especially true of those hens which are in their second or the subsequent laying years. Apparently such hens lay regularly only in the Spring and Summer, the natural breeding season.

In order to secure further practical information on this point, investigation has been made among poultrymen who make it a practice to raise Winter chicks. In a very few cases there seemed to be evidence of infection, but the large majority of them interviewed agreed that the only chicks which are hatched in late Fall, Winter or early Spring are comparatively free from this disease.

Should these early observations be fully confirmed, the selection of breeding stock which is comparatively free from infection would be greatly simplified.

Mother Hen is Spreading Disease.

The disease commonly called "white diarrhea" by the poultrymen of New England is also known as bacillary white diarrhea. Poultrymen will be interested in the following authentic facts about it:

1—The original source of infection is the ovary of the mother hen.

2—Eggs from infected hens contain the germs in the yolks.

3—Chicks produced from infected eggs have the disease when hatched.

4—The disease may be spread through the medium of infected food and water. Hence normal chicks may acquire it by picking up infected droppings or food contaminated thereby.

5—Infection from chick to chick cannot, apparently, take place after they are three or four days of age.

6—As a rule, infected chicks make less satisfactory growth than those that are apparently normal. For some time they appear stunted and weak, but may eventually undergo more or less complete development.

7—The female chicks which survive often harbor the infection and may become bacilli carriers. Infection in the breeding pens is perpetuated in this manner.

8—In all probability infection does not exist from adult to adult.

9—Infected hens are apparently poor layers, especially in their second and subsequent laying seasons, and it is of the greatest importance that the poultryman learn to recognize bacillary white diarrhea, both through external symptoms and post-mortem appearances of diseased chicks. The more discharge of whitish material from the vent is not in itself proof that the chicks are affected with this specific disorder.

Don't Use Infested Hens for Breeding.

10—Infected hens should be eliminated from the breeding pens. Such elimination is made possible by pedigree records of chicks. If the eggs from the different pens are batched separately, and the chicks segregated for the first few days, it will soon be made apparent through the condition of the chicks which pens contain infected hens. This may prove effectual in cases where infection has not become general. To determine which individual hens are infected, the trap nest should be used, and the same general procedure followed.

11—In case infection exists and it is not practicable to determine the breeders which are infected, the entire flock should be discarded for breeding purposes, and eggs for hatching secured from a non-infected farm. On some farms the disease has been eliminated in a single season by following this plan, and without any change in equipment or methods.

12—Another possible means of determining infection of breeding hens is the direct examination of the ovaries. It is exacting practice to inspect these organs through an opening in the side of the bird similar to that made in capon ing. Where the ovary is affected it is marked it may be easily detected.

13—Great care should be exercised that breeding stock, young chicks, or eggs for hatching, be secured from flocks which are free from white diarrhea infection.

14—As to the means of preventing the spread of infection from chick to chick, segregation of chicks during the first four days after hatching should prove effective. It is entirely probable that keeping chicks in small groups in the incubator for forty-eight hours after hatching will materially reduce the chances of a few infected individuals spreading the infection through the entire batch. For division into small groups is suggested the use of pedigree trays, wire baskets or bags made of mosquito netting.

The Incubator Must Be Dark for Chicks.

15—From the time the chicks begin to hatch until they are removed to the brooder, the incubator should be kept dark. This will in gely prevent the chicks from picking up the droppings.

16—Incubators, brooders, and all other appliances used in the hatching and rearing of the chicks should be cleaned and disinfected frequently.

18—Food and water should be supplied in such a manner as to prevent contamination with infected droppings. The use of fine absorptive litter in the brooder, especially for the first few days, is also advisable.

19—The feeding of sour milk may prove very effective as a preventive measure. The milk must be fed early, or during the infection stage. After the white diarrhea organism has once entered the general circulation such treatment is of little or no value. Hence, sour milk should not be looked upon as a cure, but merely as a possible preventive.

20—Since perfect physical condition is, as a rule, a barrier to disease, it is important that the health and vigor of the breeding stock and chicks be raised and constantly preserved. Proper methods of housing, feeding, incubation, brooding and management should therefore be employed.

EDITOR'S ACRE

By PROF. R. W. NEAL.

THIRTEEN THOUSAND acres of land, valued at $2,500,000, are to be laid off into ten-acre patches for free distribution to immigrants coming from the congested districts of New York city.

A gift of this magnitude (it comes from Montefiore J. Kahn, dog fancier and philanthropist) is bound to command respect. Well administered, the undertaking will produce much good. But one question, nevertheless, insists on presenting itself.

Is it possible thus to make 1,300 farmers out of hand? Is not the true farmer, the actual son and master of the soil, a product of birth and life and ancestry on the farm? The sons and grandsons of immigrants who receive such grants and remain upon the land, doubtless will be farmers in the complete sense of the word.

But in the meantime, many a father of these sons and grandsons will undergo stern experiences in his attempts to conquer a living from ten acres of New Jersey soil, and no small number are likely to find that an inexperienced struggle with the conditions of life on the farm may be as harsh as a struggle with the conditions of life in the city.

"In some sections many farms are located at considerable distances from a railroad," says the New Hampshire Agricultural Experiment Station. This make the transportation of milk for market very difficult if not prohibitive." The same thing is the case of the effect of a lack of transportation facilities on other products.

United instances of the farmers on good roads and on the extension of trolley and rail express and freight lines would result in the increase or needed transportation facilities, and this would be followed by increased farm prosperity. The extension of such lines would at the same time help to check the disproportionate rise of prices to the consumer, which has already resulted in lessening the demand for agricultural products, not because the products are unnecessary, but because the consumer cannot afford them under the present conditions determining their price in relation to his income.

What business firm would invest in real estate and buildings that would be unused for three-hundred and sixty-two days out of three hundred and sixty-five without seeking profitable employment for them through the idle period? Is not one reason why many fair societies are unprosperous to be found in the amount of money invested in grounds that make no return on the investment except during the two or three days' fair? With some tree-planting, landscape gardening, and similar improvement, many fair grounds could be made into picnic grounds, convention and meeting places, or camp and amusement resorts when they are within reach of the larger towns.

CROP SYSTEM EASES LABOR.

Better Results by Following Good System.

The choosing of a crop system whose crops "fit in" may aid in the solution of the help problem. Such a system should consist as far as possible of non-competing crops—crops, that is, which do not demand the attention of the farmer at the same time, thus permitting the handling of other to the best advantage.

Two crops that must be planted at the same time and harvested at the same time compete for the farmer's attention, causing periods of excessive demand on the farm labor, and dull periods later on.

Success or failure may be spelled in fitting crops. Rush periods during the year should be studied into, with the idea of arranging a crop system that will equalize the demand upon team and men the year 'round, for it is upon such a division that efficiency of farm labor depends, primarily.

WONDERFUL CHANCE FOR BOY ON FARM

He Has One of the Best Opportunities for Getting a True Education.

STUDY WHILE YOU WORK

One Ambitious Youth Masters Latin While He Cuts Corn.

By ROBERT W. NEAL.

THE ambitious farm boy has one of the best opportunities for getting an education. He has only to use the time that is at his disposal. He has such time, no matter how busy he is, for a great deal of the work required of him is manual rather than mental.

It is possible to hoe and to think at the same time. In the course of a day's work the farm boy has time to review repeatedly in mind, and to ponder thoroughly the reading or the lesson that he has already done. He can fix in memory forever the declension of a German noun while he is carrying the horses in the morning. He can retell to himself a chapter of history as he manages the sulky rake in the haydeid.

There are intervals of necessary rest even in the field when he can read a page or two.

I knew a farm boy who carried his Latin book into the field and studied it as he drove up and down the rows on the cornstalk cutter.

As for the study of nature—animal life, vegetable life, biology, botany—he has the finest opportunity in the world.

Clear and Active Mind on the Farm.

In some respects, the boy who is working on the farm is much better situated for study than is the boy in school. Often he is by himself for hours. He is in the pure, open air, so that his blood and therefore his brain are supplied with the freshest oxygen; his mind is kept clear and active through this.

He is not forced to prepare himself for a recitation in an hour, or two hours, but may take all day, if he wishes, to think over and understand the things that interest or puzzle him—and many a good boy has been cramped and disabled by having to know the "answer" to expected questions at a stated time, regardless of opportunity to enter into and truly master the subject by slow, sure thinking.

Environment an Aid to Learning.

Often also the farm boy is surrounded by things that stimulate the imagination as well as the intellect; the mountains loom in the distance; the beautiful trees mark the limits of the field into color and hint of romance in their depth; the shadows chase the sunlight across the dun soil; birds and insects make music near him; while he turns in thought the great ideas he has found in books, and at night the stars speak of the solemnity of life and lead his spirit Godward.

It may be that in such study the farm boy lacks "method" and direction. It may be that he is in need of more equipment. It may be that he lacks the stimulus of emulation and the discipline of "system." But if he lacks parents or friends who sympathize with his youthful aspirations—perhaps even if he lacks these also—he has, nevertheless, all the opportunity for getting an education that ambition and resolution will demand.

RURAL MAIL-BAG

Rural Mail-Bag:

If you are in doubt as to the profits in growing vegetables with your young fruit trees, here is a suggestion from the owner of a demonstration orchard established by the Massachusetts Agricultural College. The cost of the trees was borne by the college.

The owner paid for all labor, preparation of soil, fertilizers, cultivation, care of trees, fertilizers, vegetable seeds, harvesting, etc. The orchard was about 4½ acres. The cost to the owner was $118.35. Value of crops produced: Red kidney beans, $112; sweet corn, $56.63; turnips, $20. Deducting from a patch of raspberries already in the orchard, $26.01; total, $202.64. This leaves a net profit of $88.48, approximately $20 per acre. Besides this, the owner has a young orchard which will bear in a few years.

RURAL HOME AIDS WORKERS.

Rural Mail-Bag:

Living out toward the country has its advantages, even if the head of the house doesn't happen to be a farmhand or a farmer. Any employe who works receives an envelope with small figures, and this by working half a day Sunday at that. I know how appreciative I am toward a home countryward.

Here the advantages of town or city radius are applied to help the country neighbors. Yet, I sometimes wonder and ponder at what our family condition might be if we were in some less advantageous environment and without the compensating cure.

We have hens, vegetables, berries and medicine green. This Spring my two boys of eleven and thirteen earned themselves a suit and shoes by selling berries, radish and greens. If we did not possess these benefits, it would require nothing less than shrewd juggling of the pay envelope with the small figures pay the bill of household expenses.

A WORKING MAN.

MONEY IN APPLE BY-PRODUCTS.

Rural Mail-Bag:

It does not pay to let low-grade apples go to waste. Of course the grower cannot put them on the market just as they are, but he can make them into products that will sell. They can be evaporated, or made into jelly, marmalade, cider or vinegar. Such work can best be carried on on a comparatively large scale. One plant can ordinarily take care of all the low-grade apples in any town, with fair profits.

THEATRES PLANNING AN EARLY OPENING OF COMING SEASON

At Least Three of Boston Playhouses Will Offer Attractions by August 19.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

In spite of the sudden and almost complete surrender of the drama to the terrors of riding temperature, the local managers are already beginning to fix things for the new season, which threatens to arrive about two weeks earlier than usual this year.

It is already settled that three of the downtown houses will reopen their doors on Aug. 19, and it is possible that others may fall into line for an early resumption of activity.

For several seasons there has been a tendency among the astute theatre managers toward earlier closing in the Spring. The increasing prevalence of the automobile has doubtless drawn many natural theatregoers into the country at a time when business at the playhouses should show profitable returns. It is easy to attribute the falling away of attendance in the late Spring to the automobile, and the forced closing of many theatres with the arrival of automobile weather has shortened the regular playing season several weeks.

It is possible that the announced mid-August openings may be the first signs of an effort on the part of the managers to add to the opening weeks of the season what they have lost during the closing weeks.

At any rate the Park, Majestic and Shubert Theatres will throw open their doors on August 19, and make a bid for attention with that light form of entertainment that is supposed to successfully lure the theatre goer even when the weather is hot.

The first attraction at the Majestic will be "The Million," a farce that caught New York by the ears last season and held on for several months. It is expected to prove sufficiently attractive to remain much longer than the usual allotment of weeks given to plays at the Majestic. "The Million" is a whirlwind farce, but in spite of its trend toward riotousness it is extremely amusing. It will bring back to Boston in a leading role Taylor Holmes, whose efforts in character making have stamped him as one of the most brilliant of the younger generation of players.

Mary Robson will begin her season at the box weather at the Park theatre on August 19. She will have a new comedy.

It is already settled that "The Quaker Girl" will be the opening attraction at the Colonial, but the regular season at that house will not begin until Labor Day.

Playgoers who contributed to the spectacular run of "The Man From Home" at the Park theatre two seasons ago, will find good cheer in the news that William Hodge will come to the Plymouth for a brief engagement early in September, opening the new season with his splendid characterization of Daniel Voltmee of "A Man of Indiana." While the former run of "The Man From Home" set a new mark in long engagements—as engagements that gave everyone within fifty miles of Boston an opportunity to see the piece—there is little doubt that its return will upset the usual rule of poor business, and fill the Plymouth to its capacity.

Manager Fred A. Wright, who managed the William Hodge company on the road for two seasons, but was in now the director of affairs at the Plymouth, says that all last season repeated inquiries were made as to the possibility of a return of "The Man from Home." Burnt out fuse plays of the last twenty-five years have caught the popular fancy so securely as this interesting American piece.

Although everybody concerned in the drama locally will agree that there are already too many theatres in Boston, work is being pushed on M. H. Gulesian's theatre on Huntington avenue. It will be ready for some tenant early in the Fall. Rumors of a stock company for this new theatre persist in breaking out, although from this distance it looks as if John Craig and his Castle Square Theatre are supplying about all of the stock entertainment the town can stand in the regular season.

Mr. Craig, too, is severely threatened in public favor and any rival in the field is likely to find the road to success rough and uninviting.

The new theatre on Huntington avenue is sufficiently near completion to permit to give a fair idea of its comfortable interior. The house will be small in comparison to many of the down town houses, but it is laid out with good taste and will reveal an attractive interior when finished. There will be but one balcony.

Reference to "The Man from Home" will bring to mind the extraordinary work of Henry Jewett, who played the Russian grand duke with distinction. Mr. Jewett is now prominently mentioned in connection with a new stock company that is to be launched in the early Autumn. The company is being organized by popular subscription, and already a number of business men with a desire for theatrical knowledge and the money to gratify it have purchased stock in the new company.

After a week of "The Fires of St. John," Nance O'Neil will continue on her solemn, sobbing way at the Majestic by appearing this week in "Magda." Any doubt that Mr. Morison may have entertained regarding Miss O'Neil's ability to draw audiences was completely scattered before the week just ended had scarcely begun. "The Fires of St. John"—not a happy play by any means—proved to be the exact type of theatrical entertainment month desired by playgoers.

Naturally, a Belasco star of Miss O'Neil's importance would attract attention when presented at popular prices, and this interesting actress amply justified Mr. Morison's confidence in her by giving a painstaking performance of an exceedingly trying role.

Mr Morison is hoping for fair weather.

The classic drama threatens us again. This time it will be the Coburn Players, and they they will begin a series of performances in the college yard at Harvard, beginning Aug. 5. The Coburn Players have been engaged in outdoor dramatic classics in the college yard and have played at many of the leading universities in the country. Their performances at Harvard will be given under the direction of the department of English. The repertoire will include "The Merchant of Venice," "Macbeth," "As You Like It" and "Twelfth Night."

A. H. Woods has a new prima donna up his sleeve and Boston will be the first American city to have a glimpse of the young woman. When "The Woman Haters' Club" is given its first American presentation at the Tremont Theatre on Sept. 16, Mr. Woods will introduce Dorly Gilbo as not only a gifted singer, but a woman of exquisite loveliness. This must be true, for it comes straight from the A. H. Woods mimeograph. "The Woman Haters' Club" is a light opera of German extraction, and was the hit of the last season in Berlin.

TO ENTERTAIN BOSTON PLAYGOERS

PARKS, THEATRES AND EXCURSIONS

Majestic Theatre.

Local theatregoers who witnessed Miss Nance O'Neil in Sudermann's "Madga," when she played it here eight years ago, will welcome the announcement that she has selected it as her vehicle at the Majestic Theatre for this week. When Miss O'Neil came to Boston to head the Lindsay Morison Stock Company, it was generally understood that she would include "Magda" in the list of plays that she is to present during her Summer engagement, for it is not only a favorite with Miss O'Neil herself, but its superb dramatic construction, its powerful situations and its thrilling climaxes make it a classic in the sense that one never seems to tire of seeing it.

In the role of Magda or Magdalena Miss O'Neil has ample opportunity for a fine display of the peculiar talent for emotional work which has long characterized her stage endeavors.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

This week will mark the fourth and positively last week of "The Meistersingers Camping Out" at B. F. Keith's Theatre. This mammoth Summer attraction has created a genuine furore, and during the past month the singing of the combined Harvard, Schubert and Weber male quartettes, and the beautiful stage setting built by Mr. Keith for their vaudeville debut, have been the talk of all New England. "The Meistersingers" will be surrounded by an attractive bill. Kate Elinore and Sam Williams, two of the funniest comedy artists on the American stage, will make their first Boston appearance in "The Hunter and The Huntress." Another team of comedians is Armstrong and Ford, who will bring something new and original. Other big features will be Claude M. Roode, the aerial artist and tight wire expert; Alfredo, the Italian violinist and wandering street musician; the Cycling Brunettes, two wonderful wheelmen, and Williams and Segal, the dancing dandies.

Paragon Park.

The new Paragon Park, with its cabaret in the Palm Garden every evening from 9 to 11 o'clock, is more popular than ever this season. This means that the average daily attendance is beating all records of former seasons; that the amusements of the park, such as the new dance hall, the Blue Streak railroad, the human roulette wheel and the vaudeville theatre, are more liberally patronized than ever before, and that the Palm Garden is filled from afternoon until after the cabaret show is over at night.

Manager Dodge introduces still another big sensational feature in the cabaret show for the coming week. This will be the three Gilden Sisters, the French dancers from the Moulin Rouge, Paris.

Globe Theatre.

The Brothers LaRose, European acrobatic comiques in scenic pantomime; the Loudellas; Sprague and McNeece, the skaters; Mascagni, the instrumentalist; the Rays, the Song Review, the Pathe Weekly and many other features, with a long picture program will be the Globe's offering for the week beginning tomorrow morning.

The picture program will be changed on Thursday, and for this evening an interesting program has been arranged.

Bass Point.

When one stops to think it over, from an economical point of view, a great variety and a great deal of profitable pleasure, amusement and recreation is to be derived from the price of a round trip fare on the Bass Point and Nahant steamers. The sail itself is not only invigorating and a splendid relief from the heat of the city, but the trip is a picturesque one. All the interesting sights of the harbor pass in review of the excursionists on the observation decks of the commodious steamers, the General Lincoln and the Martha's Vineyard.

Norumbega Park.

That there is a host of fun in store for the patrons of the open air theatre at Norumbega Park the coming week may well be judged when one learns "The Merry Chaperon," the Matthew Ott musical comedy, that will hold forth there all week, with daily afternoon and evening performances. Is headed by an old friend and an able comedian, Bob Ott. Mr. Ott has the happy faculty of making one laugh the minute he steps upon the stage. Carrie Engel, the accomplished comedienne; Georgia Averhill, an entertainer of more than usual ability, and the Comedy Trio, which adds no little to the pleasing music of the piece.

Orpheum Theatre.

Plenty of fun and frolic will be supplied at the Orpheum Theatre this week, with a bill containing James Kennie & Co., in a comedy playlet entitled "I Died"; Collins and Hawley, singers and dancers; Major Doyle, the diminutive comedian; Tyler and Webb, character comedienne; Woodward's Statue Dogs; Carlton Sisters, singing and dancing comediennes; Bessie La Count; Ed. F. Reese & Co., in "A Call for Help"; Harry Bouton & Co., straight and crooked magic, and Louise and Evans, singing and talking comedians.

Providence Trolleys.

The fast ride through the open country offered by the special through car trolley service between Boston and Providence by the Bay State Street Railway Company has been a welcome relief from the heat oppression for these travelling between these cities or between Boston and New York. The special cars which go through without change leave Post Office square daily and Sunday at 2:45 p. m. and arrive in Providence in time to connect with the night boats for New York.

Gloucester Trips.

There is no sea trip which one may take in a single day from Boston which excels that of the Gloucester line, starting weekdays from the north side of Central wharf at 10 o'clock sharp and returning in time to take evening trains and trolleys for the suburbs. The tourist has every possible comfort and convenience at his command, and may have a sufficient time in Gloucester to "glimpse" the many charms of that delightfully old-fashioned resort.

Provincetown Trips.

One of the most popular trips in Massachusetts is the daily voyage of the steamship Dorothy Bradford to Provincetown. Skirting the coast, sailing past forts, islands and inlets, now famous in history, the passengers enjoy the refreshing coolness of the sea breeze. Ample time is allowed at Provincetown for seeing the quaint old houses, the splendid monument, the fishing industries and other interesting features.

Scenic Temple.

There is always something new and interesting at the Scenic Temple, and during the coming week several novelties will be offered in connection with headliner vaudeville acts. The photo-plays will be new in Boston and Lenna Howe's orchestra will contribute a share to the general entertainment.

Durbar in Kinemacolor.

Ten weeks at Tremont Temple have already been accorded "The Durbar in Kinemacolor," and no end of the popularity of these wonderful natural color motion picture records of the royal visit to India is in sight. At a cost of $30,000,000 the British government arranged a series of pageants and ceremonies more gorgeous than the world has ever known, and all their glories are reflected in this official production of the happenings.

Hub Theatre.

At the two-hour concert Sunday night a new program will be seen. There will be a profusion of novelties in moving pictures and a fine schedule of illustrated songs will be heard. The ladies' orchestra completes the bill.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

The continuous show at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week will be fully up to the standard in every detail. Violet Mascotte's Review Girls will offer a laughable and entertaining musical festival, entitled "The Merry Makers."

OPEN MAJESTIC AND SHUBERT ON AUG. 19

Brilliant Lists to Include the Big New York and Chicago Successes.

The regular season at both the Shubert and Majestic Theatres will open Monday night, August 19, and the list of attractions from which the two houses are booked reads like a blowbook compilation of the notable hits of New York and Chicago during the past few months.

Sothern and Marlowe will, of course, be seen in Shakespearean repertoire, while at one time entirely new and elaborate production. Margaret Anglin will come in a repertoire of her plays. William Faversham and star cast will appear in a big spectacular revival of "Julius Caesar." Henry W. Savage's musical play, "Little Boy Blue," comes here from a whole season's remarkable run at the Lyric Theatre in New York.

Bernard in New Comedy.

"The Blue Bird" will play a short return engagement, owing to its phenomenal run at the Shubert last season. Sam Bernard will be seen in a new musical comedy. The entire Lyceum York Winter Garden company, with the complete production and all the stellar favorites, will appear in "The Whirl of Society." The Damrosch Opera Company will be presented in Walter Damrosch's new comic opera, "The Dove of Peace."

Mr. Damrosch has expressed the wish that his new work may have its premiere here in Boston, where he highly values the musical judgment of theatre patrons, and it is quite likely that the first performance on any stage will be given here. Charles Klein will follow his custom of bringing a new play to Boston, his annual production this coming season being his latest play, "The Ne'er Do Well." "A Butterfly on the Wheel," which ran nearly an entire record-breaking season in New York the past season, "The Bird of Paradise" is to be found among the Shubert and Majestic offerings.

There will be a brief season of all-star cast revivals of Gilbert and Sullivan operas, including "Patience" and "The Pirates of Penzance." The notable engagement of this organization in the revival of "Pinafore" at the Shubert last season makes much for the adequateness of the presentations the coming season.

"A Modern Eve," a musical comedy success which ran for seven months in Chicago last season, is expected to duplicate that success in New York this Fall and then will complete two whole seasons in three cities, Boston being the third.

Drury Lane Success.

The great Drury Lane melodrama sensation in London, "The Whip," will be brought here in all the elaborate detail of its London production.

Sheepyboby has heard of that delightful Scotch comedy, "When Bunty Pulls the Strings," which ran all last season in New York, and, in fact, has run right through the hot weather this Summer. That is one of the bookings for this season at the Shubert. The same record has been made by "Bought and Paid For." It will all come to Boston this season. Both these attractions have made the longest runs known in New York for several years.

Henry W. Savage's comedy success, "The Million," Henry W. Savage's new musical comedy, "Somewhere Else," which will probably have its first performance here; William Collier in a new comedy; Gertrude Hoffman in a new dancing review; a new Viennese comic opera, "The Merry Countess"; a short return engagement of last season's hit, Lew Fields' "Hanky Panky"; Richard Mansfield; "Little Women," a dramatization of Louisa Alcott's well-known story; a return engagement of "Every Woman"; a return engagement of "Excuse Me"; an all-star revival of Rogers and Dockstader's Minstrels; Neil O'Brien's Minstrels; "Within the Law"; "Ready Money," and, at last, that international combination of the stage, Gaby Deslys, in "Vera Violetta."

TERRORS OF FIRST NIGHT.

Anna Cleveland, Who Soared with Atwood, Can't Tell Why.

Which is the more nerve-racking experience, the first night of a new play or the first trip aloft in an aeroplane? Anna Cleveland, who is at B. F. Keith's theatre this week in Donald Meek in "The Edge of the Whirlpool," declares the trip in the air holds the least terrors for her.

"I would much prefer to make a dozen flights in an aeroplane than to go through the nerve-racking experience incidental to the first performance of an important production," she said Saturday afternoon. "In fact, during my maiden trip into the air with Harry N. Atwood at Hammondsport, N. H., about three weeks ago, I did not feel one-half the uncertainty that I had been experiencing for several days when playing an important part for the first time before a critical audience. I really can't explain it, but one feels quite at home after one has been in the air for a very short time, and I felt that I could take flight, when I remained aloft with Mr. Atwood for thirty-seven minutes, it was quite fresh and ready to start upon another air voyage at once. At the end of a scene of the same duration, on the other hand, I would feel quite tired out, and want to rest for a few minutes."

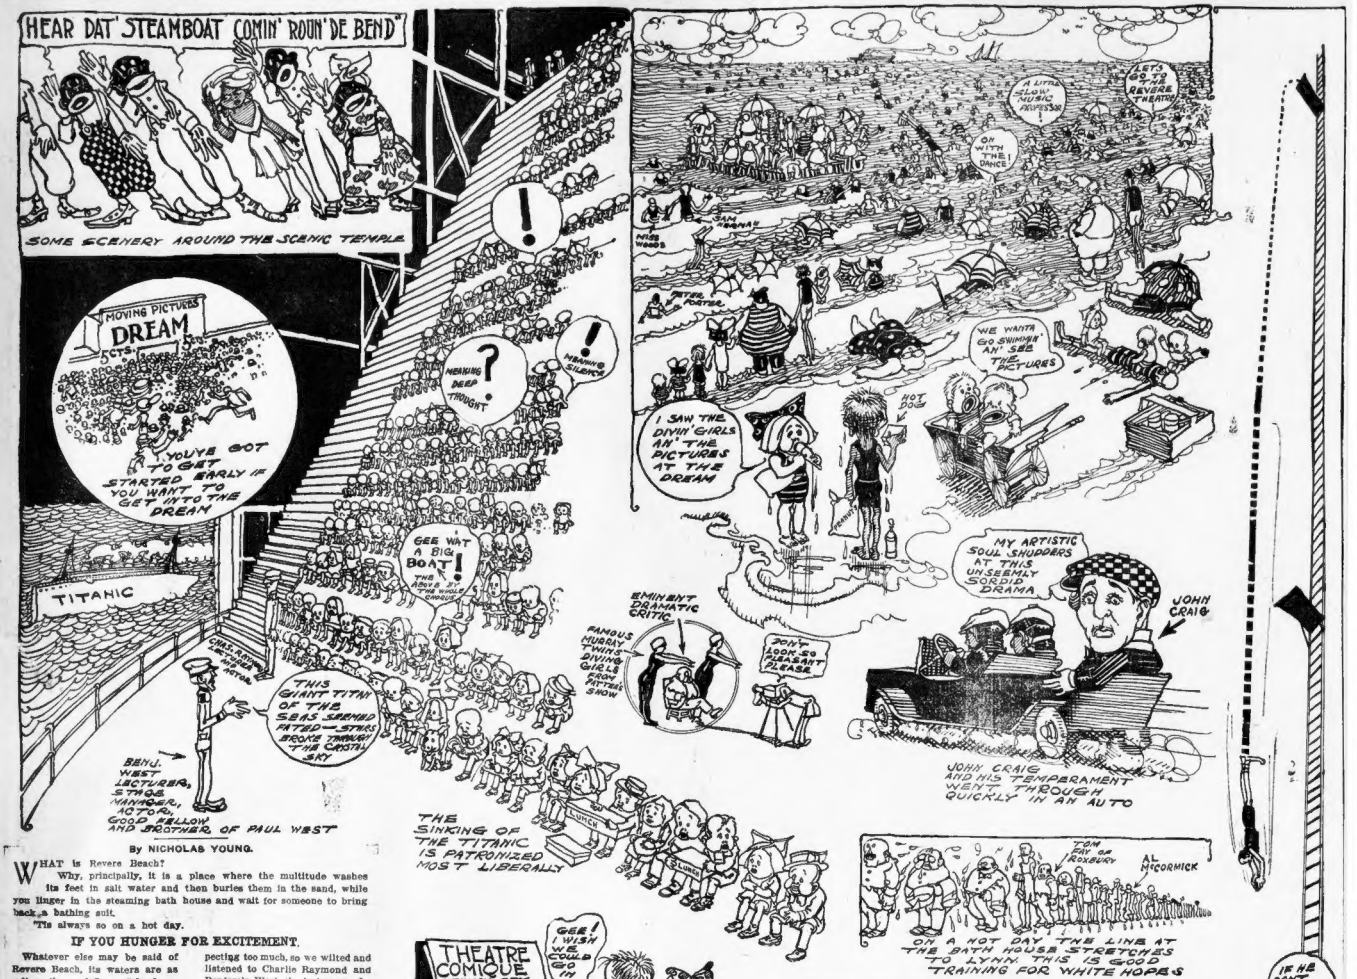
LIFTING THE LID OFF REVERE BEACH'S CLOSEST SECRETS

Mr. Nick Young, the eminent dramatic critic, and Mr. Moynahan, the distinguished Colorado artist, turn the spotlight behind the scenes at famous seaside resort, cheerfully mixing bathers, diving girls, clam bakes and thrilling side shows—not forgetting Mr. John Craig



By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

WHAT is Revere Beach?

Why, principally, it is a place where the multitude washes its feet in salt water and then buries them in the sand, while you linger in the steaming bath house and wait for someone to bring back a bathing suit.

'Tis always so on a hot day.

IF YOU HUNGER FOR EXCITEMENT.

Whatever else may be said of Revere Beach, its waters are as salt as those of Coney Island—or even Atlantic City—and its temperature, when the sun and wind are right, makes Key West sound like a Summer resort.

The wind and sun were emphatically right the afternoon we reached the boulevard. Moynahan, the distinguished Colorado artist, said it reminded him of the cook tent in a boys' camp in the Berkshires. The hot odors from a freshly cooked fish dinner slapped him squarely in the face as he leaned against the kitchen-end of a big restaurant on a side street leading to the beach.

We had discussed Revere Beach on the trip down. Moynahan insisted that its cosmopolitan nature made it the most wonderful Summer play ground in the world. "All classes meet at Revere," he declared, "and they meet on an equal footing."

Moynahan was only partly right. Sometimes you need a dangerous weapon to guarantee an equal social standing on the boulevard. Only the night before a gentleman from Southern Italy playfully laid the sharp edge of a knife against the cheek of a companion—and pressed it hard.

It is little things like that which break the monotony of Revere's peaceful quietude.

At any rate, if you hunger for excitement you may find it at Revere Beach. Naturally, most of it is gentle, refined excitement, and perfectly safe for women and children.

Moynahan stopped before a big building, from which came deep voices announcing a true reproduction of the Titanic disaster. "Let's get in out of the heat," he suggested. I followed.

Rough on the Lecturers.

To a man with a strong imagination the Titanic show might prove both diverting and cooling. We both tried hard to believe the pasteboard icebergs in the scenery were the real thing. It was expecting too much, so we wilted and listened to Charlie Raymond and Benjamin West, the lecturers, who explained the show.

Both Raymond and West earned their salaries on that bright, sunbaked afternoon. They departed from their usual line of gestures, and substituted a rotary motion about the face in an effort to wipe away the sweat of their toil. Their labor may have been entirely vocal, but they steamed feverishly most of the time.

Harry Bennett, who spends his week days at the Globe Theatre looking after the comfort of its patrons, is responsible for the Titanic disaster at Revere Beach. Harry proved a good guesser on public taste, for crowds were hovering about the entrance at every performance.

The show was great for the audience, but it was rough on the two lecturers, who, I was told, spoke 60,000 words in a day's run of ten performances.

The spirit of youth was beginning to show itself in Moynahan. "Let's try the Virginia Reel," he suggested, as we watched this twisted form of a roller coaster do its deadly work. I hesitated.

"Do you think it is dangerous?" asked Moynahan.

"Not the reel," I answered, "but the music that goes with it sounds suspicious."

The automatic machine that scatters music to make you forget your troubles when "reeling," needed the attention of a machinist and a tuner.

But, oh, Those Diving Girls.

Moynahan was yearning for more intense excitement. He had lost interest in the 10,000 or so bathers in the water, whose 10,000 or so babies were sobbing lonesomely on the beach. It had grown to be an old story.

We found ourselves in front of the "Diving Girls." The big-chested announcer held the curtain open so Moynahan could get a glimpse of Marie Burke, who posed for a plunge. It wasn't a bad picture.

"This is the place for us," yelled Moynahan, dragging me through the gate by force. I had doubts about the propriety of attending such a performance. What would the folks at home think?

"They'll never know," confided Moynahan, "we'll not tell them."

Moynahan was eager—I was embarrassed.

It must be admitted, however, that the Murray Twins were worth looking at as they balanced themselves on the edge of the tank.

"Say," said Moynahan, I don't care much for the diving, but the scenery in here is worth the price of admission."

Herbert H. Pattee, who invented diving girls, came over and talked to us. It was his show and he spoke with authority, giving statistics about the records of his young women that were astonishing. I listened attentively, but Moynahan never heard a word. Mary O'Loughlin, the Charlestown mermaid, was monopolizing his attention.

Spotted by Mr. Craig.

Over the top of the entrance gate I caught a glimpse of John Craig, whizzing along in his machine. He wasn't exactly whizzing, at that. The machine acted as if it wanted to stop, and Mr. Craig certainly did let his eyes fall for a moment upon Miss O'Loughlin. When he saw the crowds struggling to get through the gate he must have known right then and there why the serious drama of the city has such rough work surviving the hot weather.

Mr. Craig was on his way to Boston. Two hours later he passed the "Diving Girls" on his way home to Marblehead—and Moynahan was still glued to his seat.

Mr. Pattee, who knows a good water sprite when he sees one, had gathered several into his show at Revere. Mr. Pattee's first fame as an amusement promoter arrived with his invention of Love's Journey at Wonderland Park several years ago. Love's Journey was a merry-go-round affair that was popularly supposed to provide a wife for the bachelor or a husband for the maiden. The most astonishing thing about the device was that it's first victim was Mr. Pattee himself. It worked so successfully in his case that Mrs. Pattee insisted upon her husband abandoning the project immediately. She was not taking any chances on future operations of Love's Journey.

Gives Away Show Secrets.

The Diving Girls at Revere Beach, much to Moynahan's disgust, was burdened with a few male specialists. Dadivo, who is known in Rochester, N. Y., as William Shay, drops into the shallow tank from an eighty-foot ladder, and Frank Vigneau, who is plump and brown, supplies a collection of fancy strokes and plunges. Lord Helpus, too, adds to the gaiety of the act, although Moynahan said he couldn't understand why Pattee introduced any men in his show. It was a plain waste of time and money.

Not a little interest in the Diving Girls was the pleasant chatter of Charles A. Drake, the lecturer. He fairly sizzled with comedy.

"I've seen that man before," explained Moynahan. "I am sure that I have met him somewhere."

It began to look like a reunion of old Colorado friends. So I asked Mr. Pattee what Drake followed for a profession before taking the platform.

"Why, he was a detective in Denver, explained Pattee.

Oh—Moynahan.

The story of Moynahan and the Diving Girls should be told to the end—regardless of consequences. The young man deserves no sympathy.

It was not enough that I should be detained, in spite of my earnest protest, through three separate and distinct shows, but at the finish, when the sprightly water nymphs discarded—no, that's wrong—when they added sufficient raiment to venture safely upon the boulevard in search of refreshment, Moynahan still insisted that he should see at least one more performance—his sketches were incomplete.

With the aid of Mr. Pattee, a boulevard policeman and Dadivo, we managed to drag Moynahan out of the inclosure, but not until Mr. Pattee had given him a bundle of passes and an urgent invitation to return and spend the Summer.

It was a trying experience.

Moynahan Lingered to the Limit.

To show you how completely the Diving Girls submerged Moynahan's retiring nature and held him under the spell of their artful influence, it may be said that he could not even respond to the cordial invitation of Abner Dillingham Wiggleworth to peg hard baseballs at a black head which protruded from a hole in a canvas.

"I couldn't do it," answered Moynahan, when I asked him to take a chance on three balls. The colored boy was just dying to be hit, but Moynahan was not equal to the emergency. "My arm trembles," he confessed, "and I couldn't even hold the ball."

That left the pitching to me, but my aim was bad and Abner's human target passed through the ordeal uninjured.

In spite of all that has been said and written about Revere Beach it is possible to spend a quiet afternoon at the place, absorbing only the mild entertainment furnished by the picture houses.

Four of them were rushing through the usual trick of playing to capacity audiences. At the Scenic Temple a troupe of colored folk were doing plantation melodies, alternating with pictures, while at the Revere Theatre, the Dream Theatre and the Theatre Comique illustrated songs and the motion picture drama divided honors.

Merton McKenney of the Dream Theatre worked in his shirt sleeves and kept order among the 1,000 children that crowded his house. McKenney is the pioneer of low-priced entertainment. During the Winter months, when the rest of the beach is boarded up, he keeps the Dream Theatre open, giving children's matinees, for which an admission of two cents is charged.

At the big public bath house a thousand persons were waiting for service. And it was a long wait. One of the attendants explained that the chief difficulty at the bath house was to make the bathers retura their suits in an hour.

You really discovered by a trip to the shore that most of the bathers didn't bathe at all, but festooned themselves in the sand and tried to keep comfortable.

There is life and gaiety at Revere Beach.

Coney Island may have its surf and its lager, but Revere limits itself to the surf, with a dash of blistering temperature.

But don't deceive yourself into the belief that Revere's Une beer, which sounds as if it might have a wink behind its innocent name, is anything more than a modest and reliable quencher.

It hath no sting.
